U. S. Artillery Wins 24-Hour Luzon Battle, Jap Attack Smashed

Greatly Outnumbered Americans Beat Off Enemy Tank Columns Advancing in Force

Tokyo, Jan. 14 (Official broadcast recorded by AP).—Japanese imperial headquarters declared today that a Japanese submarine had scored two torpedo hits on a United States aircraft carrier of the Lexington type in waters west of Hawaii.

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Gen. Douglas MacArthur's beleaguered Philippine army has decisively won the opening round of the Battle of Bataan, smashing and driving back larger enemy forces in 24 hours of continuous artillery fighting.

American and Filipino gun captains and pointers proved "definitely superior" to the Japanese during the night and day battle, the War Department said, stopping the enemy's "big push" before it could get started.

Tank Columns Shattered

When the smoke had cleared away, here was what MacArthur's batteries had done to the long-prepared Japanese attack:

Shattered and dispersed columns of enemy tanks and other armored units moving forward to attack.

Scattered Japanese infantry concentrations, taking heavy toll of the attackers.

Silenced 11 enemy artillery batteries—more than 40 heavy field guns.

Comment Here Is Cautious

Severe losses were suffered by the enemy during the long hours of fighting, the War Department said, while American and Filipino losses were "relatively slight."

Gratifying as the victory was, Army men here caution against overestimating its importance. Japan, with unlimited reinforcements available, can reorganize and return to the attack in even greater force.

MacArthur, on the other hand, with ever dwindling forces, must continue to fight on the defensive.

Officials here attributed the success of the defenders partially to better marksmanship and partially to the fact that MacArthur is fighting on ground of his own choosing.

His batteries were undoubtedly well-placed and camouflaged from accurate spotting by Japanese observation planes. Here his own lack of air power was less of a disadvantage than formerly.

The War Department communique said that enemy dive bombers support the Japanese artillery fire and their observation planes were

Big Nazi Drive On Malta Near, British Believe

Cairo, Jan. 13.—German aircraft and troops were concentrated tonight in Sicily, possibly for an attempt to invade Malta.

Malta, 60 miles from Sicilian shores, is armed to the teeth, prepared to meet invasion, especially by parachutists.

Malta has been the base for many heavy British air attacks on Italy and Tripolitania and an attempt to invade it would appear to be the enemy's logical first step in any general Mediterranean offensive.

Base Itself Rocks From Bombings; R. A. F. Pounds Rail Centers in Thailand

By the Associated Press

Singapore, Jan. 13.—Demolition squads of royal engineers carried out broad and destructive blasting operations in the path of the Japanese invader today, effectively easing pressure on British forces continuing their withdrawal along a line 150 miles above Singapore.

News of the slowed Japanese progress came as Singapore itself shook with exploding bombs dropped by Japanese raiders. But the R. A. F., displaying a new offensive punch, blasted both ends of the Japanese-held Thailand Railway which feeds troops into Malaya.

The R. A. F. attacked Singora and Kondora in the Thai-Malaya frontier area with tons of high explosives which left flames amid the railway installations at those points.

From Burma, other R. A. F. bombers blasted the northern terminus of the Kra Isthmus Railway at Rajburi, 50 miles west of Bangkok. A railway train was blown up there, and two Japanese planes were damaged in another raid on Prachuapgirikhand, a point on the same railway some miles south of Rajburi. Another Japanese plane was shot down near the Burmese island of Tavoy south of Rangoon.

British airmen also raided Port Swettenham, Malayan west coast port 25 miles south of fallen Kuala Lumpur, capital of the Federated Malay States. The raid was the first recognition that the Japanese

Invaders Pay Heavy Price for Tarakan's Unusable Wells

By the Associated Press

Batavia, Netherlands East Indies, Jan. 13.—Tarakan, off northeast Borneo, has fallen to a Japanese assault of overwhelming power, but the one prize for which the invader has paid so heavily in ships and planes and men—the island's oil—is still many a month out of his grasp, the Dutch announced tonight.

The small Tarakan garrison was overrun by vastly superior forces and only a tragic few of its men reached the Borneo mainland alive.

All oil wells and equipment were so smashed by the little band of Dutch defenders, said an authorized spokesman, that many months of labor will be required to get them into production again.

20,000 in Invasion Force

Thus was shut off at the source a petroleum flow of 80,000 tons a month—a flow of extraordinarily high quality.

Tarakan, the first Dutch East Indies possession to fall to the enemy, was overrun by such a swarm of Japanese as to defy official estimate and, because radio communication was broken early in the assault, it was explained that the full story might never be known. There were rumors that the invaders numbered 20,000 men.

The Dutch communique reporting the loss of the island made no mention of how the fighting was going in the Minahassa section of the Island of Celebes, where earlier landings had been made on the left wing of the Japanese invasion thrust.

Reds Reach Smolensk Area, Retake Kirov

Soviet Chalks Up Deepest Westward Penetration Yet

By the Associated Press

Moscow (Wednesday), Jan. 14.—The Russians today announced recapture of Kirov in the Smolensk region and Gorokhovo, near Mozhaisk, indicating the deepest westward penetration yet made in the sustained counteroffensive against the invaders.

Soviet sources identified Kirov as a rail junction 100 miles southeast of Smolensk and 150 miles southwest of Moscow.

It is midway between Bryansk and Vyazma, and its location on the east-west and north-south railroads indicated its importance in the Russian surge.

The communique said Gorokhovo was "near Mozhaisk," but did not indicate the distance or direction. Mozhaisk is 57 miles west of Moscow.

The Kirov victory apparently represented yet another break in the Nazis' "winter line."

The Soviet air force, ranging from north to far south, was listed as destroying hundreds of German trucks and carts and many cannon and two ammunition dumps.

On the southern front, Red bombers claimed destruction of several railroad trains and a station.

Orel Line Stormed

London, Jan. 13 (AP).—Red ski troops tonight were storming the German defense cog at Orel, 200 miles southwest of Moscow, and were reported on the verge of over-running the Rzhev-Bryansk Nazi winter line which already has been pierced.

Hill Seeks Acquittal on Ground Testimony Didn't Mislead Jury

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

Representative Hamilton Fish's secretary, George Hill, yesterday asked the District Court for acquittal on the two perjury charges against him, on the ground that his testimony—true or false—did not mislead the special grand jury on Axis agents, which indicted him.

Hill is on trial on charges that he falsely testified that he did not order eight mailbags placed in a storeroom used by Fish and falsely denied acquaintance with the German propaganda agent, George Sylvester Viereck.

Special Prosecutors William Power Maloney and Edward J. Hickey, jr., late yesterday closed nearly five days of evidence. Hill's lawyer, former Representative John O'Connor, then asked Justice F. Dickinson Letts to direct the jury to acquit Hill.

Hill recalled that false testimony, in the eyes of the law, is not perjury unless it relates to a material matter.

The mailbags, which were spirited out of Prescott Dennett's propaganda mailing base and found later in Fish's storeroom, were in court yesterday. O'Connor pointed at them and argued that no falsehood of Hill's had hampered the grand jury, because eventually—when

President Says Agencies Must Move

Plans to Decentralize Old-Line Offices Will Not Be Altered, He Declares

President Roosevelt declared yesterday that the Administration is adamant in its determination to move Federal offices from Washington to make room for new defense agencies.

The people of the District have not yet awakened to the fact that a great many more Federal workers will be coming here in the near future, he said, and that decentralization of old-line offices is necessary to make room for them.

Even if all the office and housing space advocated by some members of Congress were constructed in the District area it still would not take care of the planned population increase, the President said.

Modification Out, He Says

There is no possibility of a modification of the Administration's decentralization plans, he emphasized.

By executive order 12 old-line Federal agencies, with a total personnel of some 10,000 workers, have been ordered to move from Washington to other cities.

Congressional opposition to the decentralization move, however, has not abated, and last night Senator McCarran (Democrat), Nevada, said he will introduce a resolution in the Senate today in an attempt to block removals.

Following a 20-minute conference at the White House with the President yesterday, Senator McCarran, chairman of the Senate District Committee, declared "The situation is unchanged. I'm going to press for passage of my resolution which would require a study of the problem made before any Government agencies are moved."

President Approves Survey

Revealing little of what took place at the conference, Senator McCarran nevertheless stated that the President is willing to have Commissioner of Public Buildings William E. Reynolds survey the problem of office space here with a view to perhaps constructing temporary office buildings in this area.

The President also said that the local transportation and traffic problem should be considered in a review of whether Federal agencies should be removed from Washington, Senator McCarran stated.

Representative Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, chairman of the House District Committee, who accompanied Senator McCarran to the White House, expressed satisfaction that the President had consented to a study of the situation

Farm Bloc Lambasted By Roosevelt

Price Bill Changes Would Result in Damaging Inflation, President Asserts

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt yesterday took the field against farm bloc amendments to the price-control bill with a warning of inflationary damage as a consequence to both farmers and consumers.

He carried his fight to the country at a press conference after calling House conferees to the White House to urge them to hold fast against the Senate's farm bloc runaway.

The President opposed strenuously the O'Mahoney amendment, which he said would set in motion an inflationary spiral, hurtful to all, and slapped again at the Bankhead amendment for an Agriculture Department veto on price orders.

Floor Battles Certain

House and Senate conferees on the widely different price control bills passed by the two Houses meanwhile slated an initial conference tomorrow. Preponderantly they favored the President's view, but predicted privately a pitched floor fight on any report they may make.

Rewriting in conference of some key price bill provisions appeared likely, with the O'Mahoney amendment discarded, and the Bankhead amendment probably modified. There was talk of reviving the House bill provision for a five-man board of appeals with power to pass finally on price orders.

The O'Mahoney provision which bore the brunt of the President's attack directs that the Federal Reserve Board's index of industrial wages be used as a factor in computing parity. This would raise the ceiling below which farm prices could not be fixed to 121 per cent of parity and permit a 25 per cent free rise in farm price levels, it was said.

Fears Huge Debt Burden

The President told reporters that the overwhelming majority of farmers in every section of the country did not want to be accused of starting a price spiral which in the long run would be costly to them and everybody else in the United States. He said he was convinced that the majority of farmers do not want responsibility for having so-called farm leaders upset the entire applecart in the war effort.

If the O'Mahoney amendment became law, the President said it would start such a spiral sooner than anything that could be suggested and would do more than anything else to saddle a huge debt on

Baby Boy Burns to Death, 4 Firemen Felled in 2 Blazes

A 1-year-old child was burned to death in his stroller and four other persons were rescued, three firemen overcome by smoke and another injured in two fires yesterday.

The child, Royd Nunley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Nunley, 3913 B Street Southeast, had been bathed and was left asleep in his crib while his mother went to a nearby grocery. She left the child in the care of her two other children, Ann, 5, and Gary, 2, who were playing with a neighbor's child, Robert Frost, 3.

Anne put Royd in his stroller and rolled him to the kitchen where the other children were playing. One of the children, it is said, turned on the pilot light of the gas stove and ignited some paper. Parts of the burning paper fell in the child's crib.

While the children were trying to extinguish the blaze, Mrs. Anne Fox, of the same address, arrived. She administered first aid to the child and then called an ambulance.

In a two-alarm blaze in the Salus Style Shop, 1340 Seventh Street Northwest, last night, four persons were carried to safety and four firemen were felled. Mrs. Helen Donohue, 44, was carried to the street by firemen from the third floor of an adjacent building, 1338 Seventh Street, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Beavers and their 14-year-old daughter were rescued via a ladder bridge over an areaway next door. The daughter was ill in bed with pneumonia.

Fireman Ernest Brandt, Truck Company No. 3; Joseph Carter and Caesar Young, Engine Company No. 4, were overcome by smoke fumes, and J. R. Ludham, Engine Company No. 2, suffered severe cuts from shattered glass. Brandt was overcome twice before the fire was put under control.

A fire caused a small amount of damage at the girls' cottage at the Industrial Home School, 2433 Wisconsin Avenue Northwest last night. When firemen tried to enter the building, they were forced to break down two heavy doors. Capt. Elmer F. Stern, No. 5 Engine Co., said one girl was overcome by smoke and was revived by the fire rescue squad. He said he believed the fire was caused by matches ignited by a radiator.

Only six girls of 23 quartered in the dormitory were in the building at the time. The others were attending a movie in another building.

Another fire caused damage estimated at upward of $20,000 at the Bethesda stone plant of George A. Fuller, builders, yesterday. The plant has not been in operation since last October.

Roosevelt Gives Him Sweeping Powers To Speed Arms Output

OPM Plans Vast Rise in Output Of Magnesium And Aluminum

The OPM is planning a vast expansion of aluminum and magnesium production with the expectation of drawing the necessary electric power from civilian and industrial sources by means of gigantic grid systems, power poolings, "blackouts" of nonessential uses and an extensive civilian conservation campaign.

It was learned yesterday that the Supply Priorities and Allocations Board has already approved a project for 150 million additional pounds of magnesium, to be added to the 400 million pounds already set as an annual goal. In addition, OPM sources believe that at least 400 million to half a billion pounds a year must be added to the present objective of 1,600,000,000 pounds yearly aluminum capacity.

Tightest Bottleneck

Chief bottleneck to the program to supply the essential war metals for expanded aircraft and incendiary bombs under the new war program is the supply of electric power. Despairing of obtaining more from hydroelectric sources—inasmuch as the completion of new dams on untapped rivers requires too much time—the OPM is contemplating drawing the energy from existing or expanded electric plants.

This would mean, informed quarters said, that the new metal plants would be located in existing industrial or city areas and that pooling systems would be used to draw in electric power from surrounding areas.

At the same time, this program will have to be supplemented, it was admitted, by "blackouts" of the sort successfully practiced last fall in eight States of the Southeast, where theater marquees, neon and other advertising signs and display windows were darkened to save power.

Cuts Sought of All

In addition, all industrial and civilian establishments, as well as householders, will be urged to cut their power consumption to a minimum, by avoiding unnecessary lighting, taking care to turn off lamps, and cutting out needless use of electrical appliances of all sorts.

Encouraged by the results of the Southeastern pooling system, OPM officials believe that perhaps 15 per cent more power can be pumped into a given area by the use of carefully developed grid systems and "blackouts" of nonessential lights.

In the meantime, officials are working desperately to obtain Congressional authorization for the Douglas Dam in Tennessee, appropriations for which were bolcked last year by Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee.

Unless special authorization is granted before February 1, the dam cannot be built in time to provide the power necessary in 1943, thus jeopardizing capacity for 100 million pounds of aluminum and other

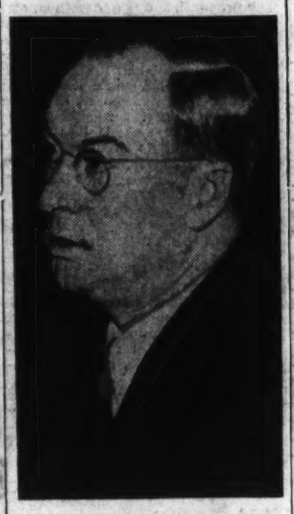
War Production In His Hands



DONALD M. NELSON
America's Beaverbrook

His Decision Will Be 'Final;' Wallace To Be Vice Chairman Of New Board

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

Control of the Nation's entire war production program will be centered in one man, Donald M. Nelson, President Roosevelt announced last night.

Nelson will be chairman of a new War Production Board, consisting of the present members of the Supply Priorities and Allocations Board, and as chairman will have "final" decision on all questions relating to the building of America's military arsenal. SPAB will be abolished.

Sources close to the former Chicago merchant said that the grant of power was such that Nelson could establish himself as "minister of supply" with full and binding authority over the granting of contracts, the production of raw materials and finished munitions, and the methods and procedures of all war procurement.

Job Likened to Baruch's

The delegation of authority—the most complete since Woodrow Wilson's grant to Bernard Baruch in World War I—came after weeks of Administration and public agitation to clear up a "bogged down" production situation in which lines of power sprawled, without clear definition, throughout the fabric of the OPM, the Supply Priorities and Allocations Board, and the Army and Navy procurement branches.

Particularly since the attack on Pearl Harbor, criticism of the continuous conflicts of authority had mounted to a crescendo, with demands growing that red tape be cut and that vitality be added by the appointment of someone in this country with powers equivalent to those of Lord Beaverbrook, British minister of supply.

Statement in Full

Nelson's new position, it was believed, was fully equal in authority, if not superior, to that of his titled British counterpart.

The White House statement:

"By Executive order I will establish a War Production Board, which will be granted the powers now exercised by the Supply Priorities and Allocations Board. I will appoint Donald Nelson as chairman of the War Production Board.

"In addition to being chairman of the board, he will be charged with the direction of the production program and have general

OPA Drafts Plan to Help Auto Dealers

Freezing Order Faces Modification; U. S. to Pay List Price for Cars

By Robert De Vore
Post Staff Writer

A "short-range" program for rationing of floor stocks and January production of automobiles in a manner that for the most part will enable dealers to stay in business has been worked out in negotiations between dealers' representatives and the Office of Price Administration, it was disclosed yesterday.

L. Claire Cargile, president of the National Automobile Dealers Association, told the House Small Business Committee at the close of a full-day session devoted to the plight of 44,000 auto dealers under the OPA freezing order, that the negotiations were "very satisfactory," but he refrained from disclosing relief measures on which tentative agreement has been reached.

With details of the first phase of the rationing program due to be made public today, some of the principles scheduled to be adopted for the protection of auto dealers are these:

1. Delivery by the dealer of all orders placed prior to January 1.

2. All autos and trucks produced, except those for military use, to be distributed through dealers regardless of their ultimate destination.

3. Full list price to be paid dealers for all cars requisitioned or purchased by the Government.

4. Modification of the freezing order to permit sale of specialized machines of limited use, such as hearses, ambulances, highly customized models or trucks spe-

Conferees Agree On One-Hour Daylight Time

Senate and House conferees were reported in agreement yesterday to ask both chambers to approve universal daylight saving time of one hour.

Members said that the conferees agreed to accept that legislation passed by the House, instead of the Senate bill which would give President Roosevelt authority to set clocks ahead as much as two hours in any defense area where conservation of electrical energy was deemed necessary.

Capital Debates—Did First Lady Call Knudsen 'Big Teddy Bear?'

By Ruth Cowan
Associated Press Staff Writer

Did or didn't Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt call William S. Knudsen a "great big teddy bear?"

That's one thing Washington is gossiping about.

An official of the Office of Civilian Defense disclosed that Mrs. Roosevelt, who is assistant civilian defense director, went to see the OPM administrator last week.

Mrs. Roosevelt is inclined to view the community problems that result when workers are laid off while plants convert to war production as of concern to the Office of Civilian Defense, the official explained.

This official said Mrs. Roosevelt cited Knudsen's home town of Detroit, the heart of the auto industry, as an example of the need for planning ahead to meet problems resulting from conversion unemployment.

A story has been published that meeting didn't go so smoothly, and the story relates that Mrs. Roosevelt in telling about it later hung the "teddy bear" description on Knudsen.

But this bear stuff is nothing new to "big Bill," for a bit of research into stories written about him reveals that he had been previously likened to "a well-dressed but very intelligent polar bear."

He is 6 foot 3 and very broad-shouldered.

Pan-American Talks Face Dispute

Argentine Envoy May Quit Parley If Insistence Is Made to Break With Axis

By Everett R. Holles
United Press Staff Writer

Rio de Janeiro, Jan. 13.—A report that Argentine Foreign Minister Enrique Ruiz Guinazu plans to quit the Pan-American Foreign Ministers Conference if the other nations insist that his country join them in breaking diplomatic relations with the Axis circulated here tonight.

Speculation over Argentina's course of action increased as representatives of other key nations, who will open the conference tomorrow, were reported drafting a joint defense program for introduction at an early session. The proposal, it was said, will include military and naval collaboration and establishment of a hemispheric general staff with headquarters at Washington.

[The Associated Press quoted Mexico's foreign minister, Ezequiel Padilla as saying at Rio that his country, Colombia, and Venezuela had formed a bloc which would seek a united Pan-American severance of relations with "the nations at war with the United States." The nations in the bloc already have severed relations with the Axis powers, while the Central American and Caribbean countries have declared war on the Axis. It was pointed out that severance of relations would mean the ousting of Axis diplomats and agents throughout Latin America.

[It appeared that German diplomatic agents at Rio were preparing for a breaking off of relations by the Latin-American nations, since numerous press dispatches told of reports that at both the embassy and consulate many papers were being burned, usually a sure indication that the foreign representatives are preparing to depart.—Editor's note.]

Ruiz Guinazu now is scheduled to confer on his arrival here tomorrow with Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles, head of the United States delegation.

Their talk probably will provide the key to the conference, in view of Argentina's importance in deciding whether 100 per cent hemisphere solidarity against the Axis will be maintained.

It was believed that the United States will seek unanimous severance of relations with the Axis. Advantages of such a break would be two-fold: (1) It would clamp down on anti-American activities in Latin American, and (2) would prevent Axis representatives from using the American countries as relay points to send information from the United States to their respective governments.

Welles has won new strong support for an early showdown on Argentina's opposition to a joint break with the Axis.

He said his talks with President Getulio Vargas and Foreign Minister Oswaldo Aranha of Brazil were "highly satisfactory and encouraging," and it was speculated that Brazil will stand solidly with the United States in a firm attitude toward Argentina.

The military and naval defense collaboration plan is expected to be presented by Chilean Foreign Minister Juan B. Rossetti, also due to arrive tomorrow, and it was believed that it will be strongly supported by the United States and the other key delegations.

Welles is expected to confer with Rossetti tomorrow and the details of the proposal will then be outlined. The proposal, it was understood, embodies a plan for the naval defense of hemisphere shipping routes, whereby the navies of such countries as the United States, Argentina, Brazil and Chile would convoy all shipping along their coasts in relays.

The plan, it was reported, may involve aid from the United States, such as use of its destroyers.

Wayne C. Taylor, Undersecretary of Commerce, today was engaged on the shipping problem and sought information regarding the 350,000 tons of Axis and former Axis shipping tied up in South American ports.

Keen interest of Axis diplomats in the conference was accentuated today when it was revealed that A. Sigehiro, Japanese naval attache, was lodged in a room at the Copacabana Palace Hotel next to Robustiano Patron Costa, of the Argentine delegation.

Italian Ambassador Ugo Sola was a visitor at the foreign office today and his call upon Aranha was sandwiched in between official visits of various delegations.

U. S. and Uruguay Sign Lend-Lease Agreement

By Hedley Donovan
Post Staff Writer

The United States and Uruguay yesterday signed a significant lend-lease agreement, on the eve of the Rio de Janeiro conference on common defense measures for the Western Hemisphere.

The agreement to furnish Uruguay with military and naval supplies followed within 24 hours formation by Mexico and the United States of a joint defense board.

Both agreements were seen here as an auspicious prelude to the conference of American foreign ministers opening in Rio tomorrow, at which the position of Argentina apparently will be the only major barrier to a unanimous severance of political and economic relations with the Axis.

The lend-lease agreement with Uruguay, Argentina's neighbor, is understood to involve a loan of about 20 million dollars.

Signing of the agreement was announced by Uruguayan Ambassador Juan Carlos Blanco after a call at Secretary of State Hull's office. The envoy was accompanied by military, naval and air attaches.

Meanwhile, the White House announced that President Roosevelt, acting in accordance with provisions of a 1926 treaty with Panama, had proclaimed "maritime control areas" in Panamanian waters near the Atlantic and Pacific entrances to the Canal Zone.

Purpose of the proclamation was described by the President as the safeguarding of the canal and "national and hemispheric defense."

Welcomes Mexican Understanding

Regulations issued simultaneously by Mr. Rosevelt prescribe strict rules for merchant vessels navigating the control areas, similar to rules now in force in waters near a number of United States ports.

The lend-lease agreement with Uruguay was described by Secretary Hull yesterday as part of a general movement of cooperation in hemispheric defense and typical of a fine spirit now prevailing in Pan American relations.

He spoke in much the same terms of the Mexican agreement, in response to press conference questions, adding that the Mexican understanding was not surprising, but most welcome.

Hull called it a coincidence that the two agreements had been announced shortly before the convening of the Rio conference. Asked if there were any possibility of a lend-lease agreement between the United States and Argentina, he smiled and said he couldn't go into that question.

Belief that the Latin American and all other members of the United Nations are likely to enlarge their military and naval missions in Washington was expressed yesterday by President Roosevelt.

Cease Latin Fourflushing, DoyleDemands

Real economic assistance to our Latin-American neighbors and a sincere attempt to appreciate their culture were urged last night by Henry Grattan Doyle to replace all the "fourflushing" going on about South America.

This fourflushing, the dean of Columbian College at George Washington University told the fifth annual Pan-American Conference of the university at the auditorium of the United States Chamber of Commerce, includes the many "half-baked experts"—men who dash through South America, then come back and write a book of great authority on it.

It includes also, he said, the sending of movie actors and other "so-called good-will ambassadors" who, knowing little about the land, create resentment from its citizens.

At the same time Doyle praised the Good Neighbor work of President Roosevelt and of Nelson Rockefeller, coordinator of inter-American affairs.

Dr. Francisco Castillo Najera, Mexican Ambassador who was on the same program, speaking on "Future Mexican-United States Relations," forecast a "future of brotherhood for the two countries."

"It does not matter that some statesmen—I do not speak of the peoples—may have forgotten the rules of international ethics and pretend to master the world through brutal despotism," he said. "Neither Hitler, with his barbarian conception of a 'new order' where might intends to dominate even thought and impose religion, nor Mussolini, renegade of Latin tradition, will succeed in plunging into darkness the sun of democracy."

James S. Carson, vice president of American & Foreign Power Co., said our present condition of "no tires, no golf balls, no girdles" is due to a lack of "intelligent precaution" through our failure to look to Latin-America for our rubber supply.

Navy Flight Training Age Reduced to 19

The Navy announced last night that the age limit for enrollment for flight training has been reduced from 20 to 19.

Unmarried men, 19 to 26 years old, who have had at least two years of college and have been citizens for at least ten years, may be accepted in class V-5 of the Naval Reserve for aviation training. College seniors, juniors and sophomores may enlist now and complete the current college year before reporting for duty. Upon earning their wings, candidates are commissioned as reserve ensigns.

Nelson Named Czar of War Production

supervision over all production agencies. His decision as to questions of procurement and production will be final.

"Mr. Nelson will report to the President as to the progress of the program. He will no longer serve as director of the Priorities Division (of OPM) but will devote his entire time to directing the production program.

"Vice Chairman Wallace, as chairman of the Economic Defense Board, will serve as a member of the War Production Board, as will the other members of SPAB."

He Was Mail Order House Chief

It was understood from reliable sources that in the drafting of the executive order mentioned by Mr. Roosevelt, Nelson will be able to "write his own ticket."

Nelson, former executive vice president of Sears, Roebuck & Co., Chicago mail order house, began the rise that ended last night as war productio czar in the early days of the defense program. He came to Washington in June 1940, with the National Defense Advisory Commission, in which he held the position of coordinator of purchases.

With the creation of the OPM, in January, 1941, Nelson was made director of purchases and quickly distinguished himself in revamping the purchasing procedure of the Army Quartermaster Corps. His reputation growing, he was made executive director of SPAB and director of priorities last August.

The setup announced last night is known to follow lines which Nelson has privately urged for several months. He has declared that it would be unwise to remove from the Army and Navy the actual procedure of awarding military contracts, particularly because of the inevitable delay which would ensue were a new agency created to take over this function. Instead, he urged that authority over production and procurement policy in general and over specific contracts themselves, if necessary, be vested in a single individual.

Confirmed "Conversionist"

Along this line, it was expected that Nelson would act in effect as head of a "department of procurement" with authority over the Army and Navy's placement of orders and that he would seek to link civilian technicians, purchasing experts, engineers and industry representatives with the military buying officers in a closer relationship than has existed before.

As distinct from many officers of the armed services and many important figures in OPM, Nelson is known as a confirmed "conversionist," with the strong belief that to achieve the huge schedules of the new war program, civilian industry must be revamped to use existing machines and facilities for war output.

Nelson's appointment was also seen as the first of a series of reorganization steps to follow in OPM. These steps, involving principally a major "housecleaning" of personnel, will probably stem from Nelson himself, it was indicated, rather than from the White House.

In the absence of a published executive order, the question was debated last night as to the extent of Nelson's authority, particularly whether it reached to the procurement branches of the armed services. It was pointed out, however, that the President's statement that Nelson's "decision as to questions of procurement and production will be final" was meaningless unless his powers covered the actual agencies placing the war contracts.

The sudden White House action, known to be a surprise even to Nelson and certainly to the rest of the OPM, was believed provoked not only by the growing criticism of OPM and its defaulting on the job of industrial conversion, but also because of the final failure to demonstrate clear-cut action last week during conferences with the automobile industry.

These conferences were considered a "last chance" for the OPM and its existing directors to show their ability to plot a program for the conversion of the Nation's largest civilian manufacturing industry. No coherent program was advanced and the conferences adjourned in an atmosphere of acrimonious inconclusiveness.

Asked about Nelson's possible course of action and the extent of his power, one OPM official close to the new czar forecast that Nelson's job "is whatever he choose to make of it."

He explained that Nelson has the final say on what contracts shall be placed and to what companies, the amounts that should be sought, the prices paid and the methods used.

In his supreme position, Nelson is said to be better able to impress on the Nation's productive facilities the ideas and procedures he has long advocated but which he felt unable to effect in his previous position. As executive director of SPAB, he was potentially the "boss" of OPM, but as OPM director of priorities, he was the subordinate of OPM Directors General Knudsen and Hillman. At the same time, even SPAB had no final authority over Army and Navy procurement except insofar as two SPAB members were the Secretaries of War and Navy.

Under the new set-up, however, and "charged with the direction of the production program," it was believed that Nelson would have a determining voice even over selection of the key personnel of the production and procurement agencies.

What course of action would be taken by Knudsen and Hillman, who have borne the brunt of criticism for OPM's less-than-all-out production efforts, was not known. Whether they would be content to continue in a subordinate position was a matter of speculation last night.

The President's impending action was seen as placing the new War Production Board as the top advisory agency of the war program. The other members are Vice President Wallace, representing the Economic Welfare Board; Knudsen and Hillman of the OPM, the Secretaries of War and Navy, Jesse Jones, in the role of Federal Loan administrator; Harry L. Hopkins, special assistant to the President, and Leon Henderson, price administrator.

Nelson Climbed 'Hard Way'

By International News Service

Donald Marr Nelson, the dynamic new directing genius of the Nation's No. 1 war job, chairman of the War Production Board, came up "the hard way."

The son of a Hannibal, Mo., locomotive engineer, he won a scholarship to the University of Missouri by leading his class in the Hannibal High School.

He worked his way through college with odd jobs, and graduated with a B. S. in chemical engineering in 1911. He had decided on teaching as a career and got what he intended should be a temporary job with Sears, Roebuck & Co., in Chicago in 1912 to save the money to get his PH. D. at Princeton.

He has remained with the huge mail order house ever since, rising from manager of the men's and boys' clothing department in 1912 to the directing head of the concern. Since 1930 he has been executive vice president and chairman of the executive committee of the concern.

He is a director of the Union Pacific Railroad, the Nineteen Hundred Corporation, Colonial Radio Corporation, and Florence Stove Co., and a member of numerous Chicago clubs.

Physically, as well as mentally, Nelson is a big man. He stands well over 6 feet and tops 200 pounds.

Before he came to Washington in March last year to take over the procurement job for war production, Nelson had previously served the Roosevelt Administration, beginning in 1934, with the National Industrial Recovery Administration and in the setting up of the Wage-Hour Act. He was reported at that time to be President Roosevelt's choice for administrator of the Wage-Hour set-up.

He was married to Helen Wishart, of Chicago, in 1926.

Politically, Nelson is a Democrat and a New Dealer.

His income as head of the Chicago concern was approximately $70,000 yearly when he came to Washington to take up his $1-a-year production job for Uncle Sam.

He puts in a 12-to-15 hour day regularly in his defense post.

Nelson's driving power is to get the job in hand done. His enthusiasm for his defense post springs from a personal conviction that America's primary job today is to drive Hitlerism off the face of the earth. And the way to do it, Nelson says, is to concentrate America's productive power on the task.

AN AGENCY FRIEND SAID THAT THE OTHER DAY WHILE DISCUSSING THE QUALITIES OF TRANSIT ADVERTISING. SO, LET'S DO IT!

First consider the space. The standard 11"x28" card gives you 308 square inches to tell your story and illustrate your product exactly as IT IS, IN THE PACKAGE AND IN USE.
This card—which can be read for a distance of 12 to 15 feet, by an audience having sufficient time to read long selling copy—allows plenty of space for ADEQUATE SELLING COPY. It is not a poster but, rather, an amplified sales story in full and accurate color, that rides with its audience approximately 15 minutes on each trip. The card appears in a well-lighted vehicle, seldom more than 6½' from the floor. Here in Washington, the car or bus in which it is displayed carries 700 passengers each day. Think of it . . . a potential audience of 21,000 in one month! That is enormous circulation for a very small investment.

These riders, in the main, are WORKERS and SHOPPERS . . . your prospective customers! They ride the cars and buses to get places economically. Since they earn money, they have money to spend, and since they are regular riders, Transitads can educate them to become regular users of your product or service. Remember that time element—an average of 15 minutes per trip! It is a long time, filled with selling opportunity, and your ad is visible throughout the entire trip . . . and remember, too, its average cost is 2½ cents per day.

Right now, in Washington there are approximately 1,500 active street cars and buses. To indicate the importance of these cars one must know that each of these units, in which this advertisement appears, travels an average of 2,460 miles in a month—and its operating schedule is over nine hours daily.

You can readily understand then, what the operation of the Capital Transit Co. means to the business life of the city . . . what it means to the EMPLOYER whose employes must be to work on time . . . what it means to the RETAILERS—small and large—whose CUSTOMERS must be delivered to the store doors at a minimum of expense, but with a maximum of convenience . . . what it means to you, as an advertiser, who recognizes the value of this huge audience, which will spend hours each month in view of YOUR advertising at a cost which is KIND TO YOUR BUDGET.

Knowing these things, why not call NATIONAL 2804, and our representative will clarify any questions in your mind,—or ask your advertising agency to investigate for you.

Navy Department Being Reorganized

90 Feared Lost

Sub Sinks Ship Off Nova Scotia

By the Associated Press

An East Coast Canadian Port, Jan. 13.—An enemy submarine brought the war closer to American shores within the last two days by sinking without warning a large armed steamship 160 miles off Nova Scotia.

Two torpedoes finished off the liner, presumably British, and accounted for perhaps 90 lives. Ninety-one were known rescued after 20 chill hours in near zero weather on the bleak Atlantic. Among those saved were 66 Chinese, believed to have been crewmen.

The attack was the closest to the Eastern Coast in the war.

The ship's captain, an Englishman whose name was withheld, was saved. He was suffering from severe shock and was unable to see anyone. A doctor, who attended him, said 181 crewmen and passengers were aboard but that an exact listing of casualties must await further checking.

The submarine struck during the night and the ship's gunners were unable to see it. The first torpedo crashed the starboard side, the second the port. The first was believed to have killed 15 Chinese crewmen, five others and the ship's doctor.

"It was early in the evening when the first torpedo hit," 19-year-old L. J. Hughes, of Vancouver, a survivor, said, "there was no warning and when it struck the ship began to settle. One of our gunners apparently was knocked overboard because we saw him struggling in the water. He was still there when another torpedo was heading our way. The torpedo struck him and continued on into the ship."

Most of the rescued had frozen ears or frozen fingers. The legs of several Chinese were frozen from toes to hips. Hughes said 38 Chinese died in his lifeboat when waves dashed over the gunwales and froze to their clothes.

"We pushed some of the dead men overboard," he said. "We kept the others to give us some shelter against the cold and the water which sprayed us, soaking us to the skin."

The ship settled to the bottom 20 minutes after she was hit.

Major Changes Follow Shakeup Of High Command

A major reorganization of the Navy Department, involving many divisions and hundreds of employes, is now underway as the result of the shake-up in the high command ordered several weeks ago.

Officials said that although the final reorganization plan is not complete, many important units now a part of the Office of Naval Operations will be transferred to the headquarters of the Commander-in-Chief of the United States fleet, already set up here.

Admiral Ernest J. King, named to the fleet command following the costly raid on Pearl Harbor, has much greater powers than his predecessor. President Roosevelt's executive order providing for such high authority, in the judgment of most naval officers, gives him virtual supreme charge of the conduct of naval operations.

Some Units to Be Split

As a result, he is taking over parts of the Navy Department which relates directly to the Nation's major fleets and other combat forces afloat.

It is expected that the division of ships' movements of the Office of Naval Operations will be moved as a unit from the direction of Admiral Harold R. Stark, chief of naval operations, to King's headquarters.

The greater part or all of other divisions of naval operations also is expected to be transferred to the fleet commander's headquarters. Units which probably will be split up or moved en bloc include: Naval intelligence, inspection division, division of fleet training, division of fleet maintenance, and war plans division.

That part of the Naval Districts Division which handles the naval coastal frontier forces is likely to be moved from Naval Operations to United States Fleet Headquarters.

No Change for Some

Naval Communications may remain where it is, as probably will the central division, Naval Reserve Policy Division and the Interdepartmental Communications Liaison Division.

The reorganization is not yet completely worked out, but is expected to be put into effect in the near future.

Whatever units are transferred to the fleet commander-in-chief's headquarters are expected to remain housed at the Navy Department here. Admiral King is authorized to travel at will, and probably will move his personal headquarters from time to time. His main office, however, will remain here under present plans.

There is some prospect, however, that the employment status of the units transferred will be changed. Navy Department clerical employes are mainly civil service, while this requirement may not apply at the fleet commander's headquarters.

unquestionably in the air. MacArthur is believed to have little or no planes left, but made up for their lack in the skill in which his forces were placed and in his troops' thorough knowledge of the area.

Observation posts well placed on Bataan's peaks would make "spotting" planes unessential. Moreover, the Philippine army repeatedly has held maneuvers in the very area now in dispute and reputedly knows every foot of it.

The exact position of the lines are not known here, but are believed to be in the northern part of Bataan Province, which lies between Manila Bay and the China Sea.

Communique No. 57

Text of War Department communique No. 57, telling of the action, follows:

"1. Philippine theater: In 24 hours of continuous artillery fighting, American and Philippine batteries proved definitely superior to those of the Japanese. Columns of enemy tanks and other armored units, as well as infantry concentrations, were shattered and dispersed by our fire, with heavy Japanese losses. Our counterbattery fire was particularly effective. Eleven hostile batteries were silenced. Enemy artillery elements have now been withdrawn well to the rear of the positions formerly occupied. Losses to American and Philippine troops were relatively slight.

"Enemy air activity was confined to attacks by dive bombers in support of artillery fire. No enemy bombing attacks were made on fixed fortifications.

"2. There is nothing to report from other areas."

Defense Head Resigns

Martinsburg, W. V., Jan. 13.—Edgar R. Berry, chairman of the Berkeley County defense organization and which has been acting as defense coordinator for some time, has resigned these duties to accept a position in Richmond, Va., it was learned yesterday.

Barred in Lanham Act, D. C. to Get Housing Fund Bill

While the District will not obtain funds for construction of defense housing under the 300-million-dollar additional Lanham Act appropriation, separate legislation will be started in the House to enable construction of homes for Federal workers here, Congressional conferees agreed yesterday.

The agreement was reached after Senate conferees on the bill withdrew their opposition when House conferees promised that legislation to give the District defense housing will be launched in the near future.

The Senate bill approved housing funds earmarked for the District, while the measure as passed by the House provided no funds for the local area.

Japs Capture Dutch Oil Center

ing at the Japanese fleet there, the United Press reported. Officials said the raids would continue systematically as long as the Japanese remained on the island. With oil properties destroyed, the harbor was the only thing left of any possible value to the Japanese, and there were no other prizes worth fighting for within hundreds of miles.]

Even the Dutch who somehow managed to get across to the Borneo mainland from Tarakan had no certainty of escape, for, as a spokesman pointed out:

"Borneo is one enormous jungle in which no living soul exists for thousands of miles, so that the survivors of Tarakan will certainly have a hard time to reach one of the other Dutch outposts on the east coast of the island."

Japanese aerial activity today was confined to attacks on Kolonedale, an east coast port on Celebes, in which 30 bombs were dropped with but a single casualty, and on Ternate on the island of that name. In this latter raid, said the Dutch command, 15 civilians were killed and 24 wounded.

Chinese Smash Estimated Jap Force of 7000

By the United Press

Chungking, Jan. 13.—Chinese troops have ambushed and probably annihilated 7000 Japanese reinforcements which were being rushed to Hunan Province to aid hard-pressed survivors of the Battle of Changsha, a war communique said today.

Describing Chinese successes on five fronts—Central and Western Hupeh, North Hunan, East Honan and Northern Anhwei—the communique said Chinese troops also had laid siege to Japanese forces in the walled city of Hwaiyang, Honan Province.

Mopping Up Continues

Meanwhile, the communique said, Chinese troops were busy along the Milo River north of Changsha mopping up survivors of a Japanese army, estimated between 100,000 and 125,000 men, which attempted to take Changsha.

Attempting to relieve these troops, the communique said, the Japanese sent reinforcements southward from Yochow. The relief force was estimated at between a few thousand and a full brigade of 7000 to 8000 men.

"This brigade was itself intercepted and ambushed," the communique said, describing the fighting as "terrific."

8 Are Casualties Out of Every 10

It was estimated 8 of every 10 of the Japanese force were either killed or wounded. Many of the Japanese soldiers and officers wore Chinese clothes, indicating that the Japanese wished to pass the Chinese lines without being identified as the enemy, the communique said.

North of Hankow, in central Hupeh, attacks were made on enemy positions at Kiangliang and Chienkiang and in western Hupeh. in a battle for control of Ichang, gateway to the Yangtze gorges, Chinese troops killed more than 200 Japanese in raids on two enemy-held points.

The Chinese reported having wiped out several groups of enemy troops north of Hwaiyang, in east Honan Province, and driving the remnants back into the walled city. Chinese artillery then began the siege.

9 Nations Vow Revenge Upon Axis, Traitors

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, Jan. 13.—Representatives of nine Allied countries overrun by the Nazis met at St. James's Palace today and pledged themselves to insure that Axis criminals and their Quisling accomplices, of whatever nationality, shall be tried and punished after the war.

This oath of vengeance was the key clause in the declaration of war aims signed by representatives of Free France, Belgium, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Greece, Norway, the Netherlands, Yugoslavia and Luxembourg.

Sitting across the long table from the nine powers that signed the declaration were "observers" of the United States, Britain, China, Russia, India, the Union of South Africa, New Zealand, Australia and Canada. Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, American Ambassador to the exiled governments in London, represented the United States.

Britain's Foreign Minister Anthony Eden, who made the opening address, declared that the false facade of Hitler's new order had failed to conceal the tyranny which lies behind it. He said, "How different is the atmosphere of the recent conversations at Washington and Moscow from that of the meeting in Berlin a few weeks ago attended by the Quislings of Europe and the satellites of the Third Reich. Those Quislings have little reason to look to the future with any hope."

Gen. Wladislaw Sikorski, the Polish prime minister, who presided, pointed out that now millions of men and women would hence forward know that punishment awaited the enemies' acts of violence.

Then one by one the Allied leaders spoke. Count Edward Raczynski, Poland's acting foreign minister, told how 80,000 Poles had been shot; Gen. Charles DeGaulle, of the Free French, declared that this conference "will insure that Germany will never again be in a position to harm the world," and the others all expressed the hope that was best expressed by the new Yugoslavian prime minister, Slabodan Yovanovitch, who said, "The culprits will have to expiate all their crimes."

had occupied Port Swettenham in force.

Over Singapore, British fighter planes had a busy day chasing Japanese raiders coasting in under cover of low-hanging clouds.

Several sections of the city vibrated and windows rattled. Nevertheless, preliminary surveys disclosed that the aerial invader had wrought little damage. At least six raiders were shot down yesterday.

Navy Base Probable Target

(The dispatch naturally did not give the precise Japanese targets, but likely ones would be the naval base itself, on Singapore Island, the port section and the island's big-gun emplacements and scattered air fields.

(Indications of stiffening British land resistance were received in a Singapore dispatch to a French news agency in Vichy. This report said that British regulars and Australians landed at Singapore in the last few weeks were now in the front lines and that the majority of Indian and Malayan troops had been withdrawn to the rear. It said also that the Japanese now were finding Allied artillery more active and better entrenched.)

Heavy Japanese bombing was repotred along the front. The British forces, which had abandoned Kuala Lumpur in a retreat executed in good order and with few casualties, took up positions north of Seremban, which is about 35 miles southeast of the fallen rubber center.

London, Jan. 13 (AP).—Lord Lothian, British Ambassador to Washington at the time of his death December 12, 1940, left an estate of £464,199 ($1,874,203), it was announced today. The names of the heirs have not been disclosed.

The President's Day

By International News Service

NEW ST. GEORGE: To all outward appearances, the day at the White House looked like just another lengthy, heavy 12 hours of work. But the President had the biggest bee of the year in his bonnet—kept it carefully muzzled and hidden until almost 6:30 in the evening. Just before Wendell Willkie was scheduled to speak to the conference of mayors on the need for one-man control over all defense production, the President announced establishment of a single St. George at the head of the Nation's gigantic production effort, and his name is Donald Nelson.

PRESSURE: First duty of the day that ended with the big bang was to talk straight and fast to the five House members of the committee ironing out the snags in the price control bill.

FRIEND CALLING: Taking Mr. Roosevelt up on his invitation of some weeks ago to "drop in any time you're in town," Republican standard bearer, Wendell Willkie, dropped in. For a pleasant 15 or 20 minutes the President and his former political foe had "a very nice talk."

PROTECTION FOR PANAMA: At the request of the Panamanian government the President worked up and announced an executive order establishing United States control over waters adjacent to the vital target of the Panama Canal.

Roosevelt Assails Farm Bloc

It is well known that if food prices go up, other things go up, he said. People doing other kinds of work, such as producing bombs or tanks, would be encouraged to demand an increase in wages to meet living costs touched off by the new rise in farm prices. Farm prices, tied into wages by the index, would move higher again and the spiral would continue.

The President said he stressed these points with House price conferees earlier in the day and they appeared somewhat sympathetic. He likewise told them of his objections to the amendment by Senator Bankhead (Democrat), of Alabama, giving the Secretary of Agriculture power to veto farm-price orders of the price administrator.

Calls Plan Unsound

It was unsound, he said, to give one agent of the Government power to make a decision and another power to veto it. In the long run, he said, the decisions would be shifted back to himself.

Asked whether the amendment would give Secretary of Agriculture Wickard or Price Administrator Henderson a veto over him, he replied:

"No; I can fire either one." He permitted direct quotes.

Questioned about an interview quoting Wickard as seeking a voice in controlling farm prices, the President said he received a letter from Wickard saying he had been misquoted. He said the letter was dated yesterday.

In a reply to the President's attack on his amendment, Senator O'Mahoney in a statement last night said that although it bore his name the amendment actually was drawn by 11 big farm organizations, which he named.

"The President's statements must have been based upon the unjustifiable headlines of certain metropolitan newspapers, the editors of which do not understand the farm problem nor the technicalities of parity," O'Mahoney said.

"Certainly it was not based upon my amendment and does not in my opinion accurately reflect any reasonable consequence that could flow from the enactment of this provision."

O'Mahoney Gives Figures

O'Mahoney cited figures to show an increasing disparity between farm and industrial income, said that 1,250,000 farms had a gross income in 1939 of less than $250 each and that two-thirds of all farms in that year had a gross income of less than $1000. He said these were facts which the President did not consider at his press conference.

Chairman Steagall of the House Banking Committee, who led the House conference group to the White House, said the President "asked us to get the best bill we can." Senate amendments under fire by the President are not in the House bill, but it, too, has far-reaching farm provisions. In the House version, the price administrator would be barred from fixing any farm price below 110 per cent of parity, below the 1919-29 price average or below the price as of October 1. The last two of these provisions are likewise in the Senate bill.

Accompanying Steagall to the conference with the President were Representatives Williams, of Missouri, and Spence, of Kentucky (Democrats), and Wolcott, of Michigan, and Gifford, of Massachusetts (Republicans).

"THE VICTORY ROOM," with space for 800 dancers and diners, will be opened in the Roosevelt Hotel around January 30. Either Glen Miller or Harry James will lead off the first of a series of name bands booked for the season, with broadcasting over both NBC and Mutual networks. This will be a truly splendificent spot, second to none in the country . . . Mrs. Maria Kramer, feminine hotel genius, who owns New York's Lincoln and Edison Hotels as well as the Roosevelt, is in Washington to personally superintend the creation of the Victory Room.

Grant Thompson, the cowboy rhythm roper, is throwing a "bean banquet" luncheon today at the Neptune Room for the night club eds, promises to prove he's "at home at the range."

MAESTROS' DOINGS. Joe Sudy is playing two over-sized sets of music with only a single break in the afternoon cocktail sessions at the Cosmos Room. This gives the youngsters a chance to dance until they're really breathless. . . Sasha Lukae of the Troika is a great favorite with music lovers who say "Sh-h!" irritatedly to thoughtless ones who talk when Sasha plays a muted violin . . . Milton Davis of the Rainbow Room has gone off the deep end for the new tune, "We Two Love," thinks it may be another "Intermezzo." . . . Ralph Hawkins of the Crossroads and Bill Strickland of the Lotus are the only Washington night spot maestros leading from the drums. But their styles are entirely different, with Ralph pressing the "jive" button and Bill veering from sweet to swing.

DEBUSSY IN TANGO TIME. Consolo and Melba are presenting a new tango idea in the Shoreham Blue Room. It's done to Debussy music and has a light suggestion of Moorish influence. Also at the Shoreham are Nina Korda, contralto fresh from South America, and Carl Manfort, "Man of Mystery."

Poland's Ambassador Jan Ciechanowski will speak at Meredith Wilson's 'Goodwill Luncheon" in honor of Poland at 2400 Sixteenth Street on Saturday. Music by Pete Macias' Lounge Riviera band and exquisite favors.

WHY THEY'RE HAPPY. Layton Bailey's Metronome Room Orchestra is still smacking its collective lips over that wild duck dinner given for them in the Wardman's Madison Suite, by an appreciative customer . . . Marion Powers, singing star at Paul Young's, is happy because she decided to add swing-singing to her torch songs a few months ago. She still does numbers like "Jim," but when she launches into "Rum-Boogie," it's worth going miles to hear . . . Singer Bob Pace of the King Cole Room is all chipper because his lyrical solos have brought him interesting engagements at society parties . . . Russ Cullen, the Pall Mall Room tenor, lives in a state of elation because now he's a full fledged farmer as well as a saxophonist. He's the member of the band who carries seed catalogues in his pockets.

CASINO ROYAL'S NEW SHOW is a blitz of music and dancing. The Mayfair lasses are doing a full group of new parade and tap numbers, Johnny Wages is a one-man-orchestra and Lord and Janis are waltzing a la Vienna.

Jules James, owner of the handsome new "400" Restaurant on F Street, has the strange distinction of having been "blown out of business." He operated the Million Dollar Pier at Miami for three years until a hurricane blew it into the blue.

REASONS THEY'RE GOOD. Pianist Oscar Heintze, of Restaurant "823," toured Sweden and Denmark as an 8-year-old piano prodigy. Though he only practiced half as long as other pupils of his age . . . Lola Lolik, who whirls so gorgeously at the Balalaika, is the former partner of that great dancer, Vanya Orlik, now with the Russian Cossack Choir. They'll probably join up again later . . . Soprano Carmela Lazari, of the Hi Hat, has a lovely light operatic technique. We think some credit might go to her husband, Accordionist Cyril Broughton who takes much interest in her work.

NEW NIGHTINGALERS. A girl singer is at the Nightingale for the first time! She's piquant Reathis Stevens, does charming romantic songs. Other Nightingale additions are Trombonist Bill Decker and Pianist Bernie Miller. Crowds are reported bigger than ever.

All the little (and big) piggies who are going to market tonight, meaning to the River Bend "Piggy Party," will come home looking like balloons.

Axis Forces Put Up Fight at Halfaya

But End Appears Near for Trapped Troops; Main Army Makes Stand Near Gulf of Sirte

By Preston Grover
Associated Press Staff Writer

With the British Army in the Western Desert, Jan. 11 (delayed).—From a ringside seat on the broad escarpment overlooking Salum and Halfaya (Hellfire) Pass I watched a South African brigade launch a grand assault today on the last remaining Axis nests of resistance in the Egyptian-Libyan border area.

(The British announced the capture of Salum Tuesday, leaving between 7000 and 8000 German and Italians bottled up in the Halfaya area, and their capitulation appeared only a matter of time.

(Meantime, the main German desert army, in flight for 300 miles, took an unexpected stand at the base of the Gulf of Sirte on a line running due south of El Agheila.

(Pursuing British vanguards made immediate contact with this force at a point which still is more than 300 miles short of Tripoli, the main Axis base.)

Bronzed Scotsmen from South African Transvaal paced the attack across the sandy plain upon Salum, whose port long has been under the guns of British artillery.

They attacked first along the north rim of Calum Harbor and quickly drove the Axis outposts from a ridg down to the seafront.

After this comparatively easy initial success, real trouble started.

The Germans and Italians poured deadly fire into the advancing South African ranks from machinegun and small cannon emplacements hidden in dozens of caves lining every passageway leading from the escarpment to the seashore.

Axis artillery batteries from the southern side of the harbor barked incessantly and they, too, took their toll.

Yet by midmorning the South Africans had cleaned out most of the caves overlooking the northern section of the mile-wide sandy harbor and shoreline and had occupied virtually every building left standing in the town.

By nightfall, the battered Axis forces had been isolated on the narrow lip of the harbor. Surrender or extermination appeared their only alternative.

As I write this, shell fragments are whistling around our observation post on a high point overlooking the northern end of the harbor. A German artillery battery, shelling a Transvaal platoon pinned in the rocks 200 yeards below us, is the source.

South Africans scurry along the flats below us in ones and twos. They dive into the sand as shells crack about them.

Nine forlorn soldiers who got ahead of their platoon have spent the day huddled behind the wall of a tiny house in full view of us, but miraculously beyond German machine guns.

British artillery thundered all day, seemingly threshing every foot of the tiny peninsula on the north end of the harbor where South Africans closed in steadily on trapped Germans.

One South African immediately below us made a valiant run across a hundred yards of open sand with bullets cutting a pattern of tiny sand puffs before and behind him.

But bad luck overtook him. Just as he dashed into shelter of a roofless cabin a German mortar shell scored a direct hit.

There was a blinding flash, fire erupted from the ragged walls and through the door. The soldier did not come out.

The losses were not one-sided, for the Germans, too, suffered heavily.

Prisoners dribbled back in handfuls. One German brought to our observation post said his entire platoon had been either captured or killed. He had been alone in a house all day until captured in the late afternoon.

His South African captors gave him a tin of corned beef which he wolfed hungrily.

"This war has been no pleasure as far as I am concerned," he told me.

This 31-year-old Nazi who won't fight any more is a farmer from near Frankfort-on-Main. He has been in Africa seven months and it was his first campaign.

Like other Germans, he expressed disgust with his Italian partners.

With a shrug of his shoulders he joined the parade of his comrades to the rear.

Even with victory in their grasp at Salum, the British have a lot of unfinished business in the Halfaya area.

Besides stubbornly resisting German troops, every inch of Halfaya is under German guns on towering cliffs.

In selecting Salum for their initial assault the British hoped to starve out the Halfaya defenders without a broad-scale frontal assault.

For weeks Halfaya has been cut off from sea-borne supplies. Its defenders are desperately short of food; by night planes from Crete parachute rations to them.

The British clean-up of this border stretch started with the capture of Bardia on Christmas Day, but that was a picnic compared with what I saw today.

Until the cleanup is completed, the British must make a 100-mile detour to get supplies to their forces 500 miles away in the Bengasi area.

(The line which Nazi Gen. Erwin Rommel apparently had selected for at least a temporary stand in the Libyan desert is roughly along the road which stretches from El Agheila, on the Gulf of Sirte, some 70 miles south to Marada, a malaria-ridden oasis. Advanced British elements reached this road yesterday, in pursuit of Rommel.

[The Scots who took Salum, captured 350 prisoners, cut off much of the remaining water available to the big Axis Halfaya garrison, and thus measurably increased the weight of the siege. British planes heavily bombed the main enemy position.

[Out at sea the Royal Navy scored again. British submarines sank the Italian mine sweeper Santa Pietro, damaged the 5222-ton supply ship Sirio and shelled and fired a medium-sized supply vessel. The attacks took place very close to land, for the admiralty said the action against the last-named boat had to be broken off because of fire from shore batteries. It also was acknowledged that the enemy may have succeeded in towing the Sirio into a harbor—possibly Tripoli.]

Reds Recapture Rail Town in Smolensk Area

aided by sleigh-drawn artillery and other motorized units, were said by Soviet sources to have virtually surrounded Orel, and to have swept on beyond toward Bryansk, 75 miles away.

(The B. B. C., in a broadcast heard by N. B. C., said it "understood unofficially" that Orel already had fallen, and a German radio broadcast from a reporter on the Russian front admitted that Nazi lines had been broken on a wide sector.

(The German broadcast, acknowledging the Nazis were suffering from a shortage of men, also said the Russians were employing "remarkable new tactics"—including the use of a long column of "white polar dogs pulling white sleds on which were riding Siberian snipers dressed in white coats and masks."

("They came like a flash," said the broadcast, "emptied machine guns against our lines and before we could reply they were out of sight.")

Red units several days ago captured Lyudinovo, due north of Bryansk, and other detachments were reported to have outflanked Rzhev, the northern anchor of the central line.

In this big encirclement effort the Russians hoped to trap some 100,000 Nazis still holding out at Mozhaisk, midway between Moscow and the Rzhev-Bryansk line. Another 200,000 Germans were said to be concentrated in the Orel area.

Leningrad Gets Food

London, Jan. 13 (U.P.).—The Leningrad radio broadcast tonight that food trains were arriving from the east as the German siege disintegrated, and that "the worst is over" in the old Czarist capital, where three million persons have endured seven months of virtual front-line warfare.

Chairman Popov, of the Leningrad food board, made the broadcast. He said the railways from Tikhvin (125 miles east of Leningrad) and Voibokala (not shown on maps) were now open, that food and fuel were arriving, and that "although our difficulties are not yet over and our city is still within German reach, the heavy blows of the Red army will soon break this ring and the worst is now over."

Reopening of the railways would mean that the German grip on Schluesselberg, on the southern shore of Lake Ladoga, has been broken. All railways from Leningrad were cut when the Germans occupied Schluesselberg September 10. Supplies have continued to cross Lake Ladoga

Discount Reports of Collapse Within Reich, Connally Says

Chairman Connally of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee warned Americans yesterday to discredit reports of a German collapse but to prepare instead for a long "bitter and dangerous struggle on land, sea and in the air."

"It will be a great mistake for our people to depend on a collapse within an enemy country to win the war," Connally told reporters, predicting a struggle "of at least two or three years."

Whatever local conditions in the Reich may be, Connally said there is no present reason to count on a collapse.

"They might, of course, if typhus and hunger spread, and if they get driven back across Poland," he said. "But you can't count on it."

Connally commented briefly on Secretary Knox's speech to the United States Conference of Mayors, in which he said America's grand war strategy is to marshal the anti-Axis forces to defeat Hitler first, leaving for the last the "easy by contrast" job of finishing off Japan and Italy.

"Of course, we must clean up the Atlantic, but we can't go to sleep in the Pacific," the Foreign Relations chairman said. "We started out that way, but we must wake up. Great Britain is in the Atlantic and her navy ought to be able to command that area. We are more vulnerable in the Pacific and it behooves us to be active there with all of our Navy forces."

As well as land, sea and air fighting, Connally told reporters that "we have diplomatic fronts to protect." He listed these as "Vichy and the French navy and French army in Africa, air bases in Russia from which to bomb Japan, and Nazi infiltration in South America."

"These and other questions require the utmost vigilance and care," he said. "Alaskan and Aleutian Islands and their proper utilization are of great concern. How many of our forces to send there? Should we base the Air Corps on Australia or on the precarious Dutch East Indies? These are a few of the problems that challenge us."

Death-Test?... It was this way:... One strict 5-quart fill of some one big-brand oil of quality went into each of six duplicate cars. The referee snapped the locks—no oil could be added. The 'Ten Best Pictures' Selected by 548 Critics

'Gone With the Wind' Tops the 1941 List, With 'Sergeant York' Leading All the Rest; Ole Olsen Forms a New Wartime Committee

THE RECORD NUMBER of 548 motion picture critics, columnists, commentators and editors throughout the United States, participating in the Film Daily's twentieth annual poll to determine the "Ten Best Pictures of the Year" for 1941, have voted top honors to the following feature films released between November 1, 1940, and October 31, 1941:

	PICTURE	DISTRIBUTOR	VOTES
1.	GONE WITH THE WIND	M.-G.-M.-SELZNICK	452
2.	SERGEANT YORK	WARNER BROS.	413
3.	THE PHILADELPHIA STORY	M.-G.-M.	358
4.	CITIZEN KANE	RKO-RADIO-MERCURY	341
5.	HERE COMES MR. JORDAN	COLUMBIA	248
6.	THE LITTLE FOXES	RKO-RADIO-GOLDWYN	243
7.	KITTY FOYLE	RKO-RADIO	233
8.	THE GREAT DICTATOR	UNITED ARTISTS-CHAPLIN	229
9.	MEET JOHN DOE	WARNER BROS.-CAPRA	218
10.	BLOSSOMS IN THE DUST	M.-G.-M.	153

In the large view, these selections pack precious little of the element of surprise. At least half of them were foregone conclusions, granted, of course, that no individual professional picture reviewer ever could hope to have seen all of the 431 feature releases comprising the list from which the "Ten Best" were to be chosen. For the other half, one opinion is probably as good as another, as is evidenced by the fact that the Film Daily's "Honor Roll" of films receiving an appreciable number of votes is made up of 61 titles that left indelible imprints on many critical minds.

DAVID O. SELZNICK

It is worth noting that David O. Selznick now has walked off with first honors two years in succession. In 1940 the critics bestowed their accolade upon Mr. Selznick's memorable "Rebecca."

Had not "Gone With the Wind" been something in the nature of a "holdover" from the year of its first acclaim on the basis of distribution as a "road show" attraction, and so made eligible in the national voting for the first time as a regularly released popular-priced offering in 1941, the Jesse L. Lasky-Warner Brothers production of "Sergeant York," coming into the Earle and Ambassador theaters on Friday, also at popular prices, would have been this year's winner, practically hands down—barring an improbable freak allocation of the "GWTW" ballots registered as above.

As for the remainder, they seem to deserve the approximate ratings they have received, always allowing for minor vagaries of purely personal tastes and opinions.

On the basis of distributing companies, the "Ten Best" are restricted to surprisingly few of the major producers. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, as a unified producing-distributing company, ties with Warner Bros., with two winners of its own, and the Selznick opus added. RKO registers three, as distributor, but only one as producer, Orson Welles and Samuel Goldwyn having been responsible for the other two. Columbia and United Artists account for the remaining two of the ten, with one each.

Everybody Else Was Wrong on Three!

Having nominated seven of the eventual "Ten Best," this column, as usual, entertains feelings of acute distress over the dwindling acumen of the other 547, who failed to perceive the superior merits of "Dumbo," "Northwest Mounted Police" and "The Thief of Bagdad!" Of course, it could be that they were not three of the year's best, but that seems a highly fantastic view to take. Anyhow, they all made the "Honor Roll"—not too high, some of them, but they made it. "Dumbo" was No. 6 among the also-rans; "Northwest Mounted," No. 9, and "Thief of Bagdad" 'way down there at No. 33 out of the 61. But wait 'til next year!

Spending an hour in his suite at the Washington yesterday with Ole Olsen, coproducer with Chic Johnson of "Hellzapoppin," sold out solid for the remainder of its engagement at the National, and "Sons o' Fun," their current Broadway smash, was like attending a gala performance of either one. Uppermost in the mind of our fellow-Hoosier seemed to be the official approval given the boys' idea of forming a bona fide, soundly organized Committee for the Preservation of Laughter in America, to function continuously for the duration. Laughter and the spirit of merriment is no mean factor in the maintenance of national morale in wartime and the committee, already in process of formation, has no intention of letting them die. Olsen and Johnson, Jack Benny, Bob Hope, Fibber McGee and Molly, George McManus, Elsa Maxwell and numerous others have started the ball rolling and it is snowballing into constantly increasing dimensions. More of this later. If I forget, remind me.

Phew-But-It's-Hot-in-Here Note

Now that you've started wearing that blankety-blank-blank overcoat, how do you leave it off again?

Now It's Paint That S-t-r-e-t-c-h-e-s

Amazing, the things that can be stretched these days. First it was fabrics, then glass and now, of all things, it's paint.

The development of a new kind of paint with elasticity is announced by Fleischer Studio in Miami, Fla., and it has been used to color the hald-million drawings in "Mr. Bug Goes to Town," the $1,000,000 feature-length Technicolor cartoon which Paramount will soon release.

The stretching paint, a secret formula, which is neither water color nor oil, was arrived at after six months of experimental research. It solves the problem of preventing completed painted drawings from chipping and cracking when bent.

LEONARD LYONS

Broadway Grab-Bag

New York, Jan. 13.

Lord Beaverbrook told this story—of the flight he and W. Averell Harriman made to Moscow to confer with Stalin. When their plane crossed into Russia it was shot at by anti-aircraft fire. The pilot then made his plane a difficult target by diving to some clearings between tall trees . . . When they arrived in Moscow, Stalin expressed regrets: "I'm sorry you men had this bit of trouble" . . . "Well, that's quite all right," Harriman told him. "I've been shot at by British guns and by Russian guns—but never by German guns."

IRVING BERLIN

Lieut. Barry Bingham, the Louisville publisher, who has been working in the Office of Civilian Defense, is going to England to study civilian defense there . . . Tommy Parran, son of the Surgeon General, has enlisted as a private in the Marine Corps . . . Irving Berlin's two new songs for Washington are "The President's Birthday Ball," which will be the theme of the Diamond Jubilee, and "I Gotta Pay My Income Tax Now," for the Treasury Department

Ella Winter, who was the wife of Lincoln Steffens and now is Mrs. Donald Ogden Stewart, this week obtained a job with the Office of Emergency Management . . . Miss Winter was educated at the London School of Economics and Politics and also taught there. She's had other jobs, with members of Parliament, and for six months she was Felix Frankfurter's secretary at the Paris Conference . . . Her first assignment from OEM is to assist in the Florence Eldridge-Fredric March broadcast of the play, "Thunder Rock." Miss Winter's job is to teach Miss Eldridge how to speak English with a Viennese accent.

POLITICS: The current story is of a political exile, recently arrived in this country, who went to a drug store and ordered an ice cream soda with pistachio ice cream. He clasped shut his nostrils with two fingers—and then gulped the drink . . . "Wottsamatter, don't you like a pistachio ice cream soda?" asked the attendant . . . "No," said the exile . . . "Then why do you drink it?" he was asked . . . "Because we are in a strange country," he explained, "and we're supposed to suffer."

DANCE DEPARTMENT: John Ringling North, head of the Ringling Bros. circus, visited the Copacabana last week, where he asked to meet Proprietor Monte Proser. "I guess I owe you an apology," said North. "You brought your Dance Carnival into Madison Square Garden immediately after my circus played there last spring. And I know it takes a few weeks to get the smell of my elephants out of the Garden" . . . "Oh, that's nothing," replied Proser, whose dance venture almost had bankrupted him, "it'll take a few years to get the smell of my Dance Carnival out of the Garden."

PRIZE: Paul Lukas, who was a World War aviator, has a Hungarian flying license, awarded to him by George Anders, the late Hungarian ace, who was in his squadron . . . Anders went to Los Angeles a few years ago to buy a Lockheed. At the Burbank airport he held reunion with Lukas. "I never was given a flying permit in Hungary," the actor told him. "You are an official inspector and can issue such a permit" . . . Lukas took the controls and Anders went up with him "You pass," said the inspector. "I'll mail the license to you as soon as I get back to Budapest" . . . "When will that be?" Lukas asked him . . . "I don't know," Anders confessed. "I'm flying back in this new plane."

HEDDA HOPPER

Anguish, Blood and a Cup of Tea!

Hollywood, Calif., Jan. 13. With Ty Power bandaged to the eyeballs, wounded and helpless, being evacuated from a hospital ward; Joan Fontaine doing a highly emotional scene because during an air raid they wanted to move Ty either out of the room or under the bed; Director Anatole Litvak with a broken foot and walking on an iron brace, I'll be darned if "This Above All" still wasn't a cozy set. When I arrived Litvak had just settled down to a steaming cup of tea; Robert Sheriff, who did the adaptation, was talking about his next assignment, which is Hugh Walpole's "The Blind Man's House," to star Ida Lupino. Philip Merivale was chatting about Katharine Cornell's play, in which he opens at San Francisco, and when I asked him about it, he said, "It's a long play but good." Tommy Mitchell, when he finishes this, will have done four pictures in 15 weeks—"Song of the Islands," "Tales of Manhattan," "Moontide" and this. He worked in two at a time. When he finishes, goes to Oregon to put his ranch in order, then on to Washington to offer his services to Uncle Sam.

RED SKELTON

One of our best bores fastened onto Red Skelton at the Mocambo the other night and began holding forth on the war till Red could stand it no longer, and said, "Please—could you direct me to the nearest hot-air shelter?" . . . Jerry Bergen, speaking of another one, said, "He's the kind of a guy that, if you ask him the time, will tell you how to build a watch."

Fear of accidents, mangled bodies, and sudden death has had no terrors for millions of automobile drivers, but the fear of tire rationing has slowed down our speed demons almost to a walk . . . And now that rubber priorities have reached our girdles, I suppose we'll have a "Hippy New Year."

Anne Baxter's new ring she's sporting comes from her parents, not Gene Fowler's son.

That penguin playing with Bob Hope in "My Favorite Blonde" has a voice studio doesn't like, so they're dubbing one in. Bird's natural voice sounds like that of a jackass. Dubbed-in voice sounds like a "Woonk."

Wouldn't it be a howl if Metro bought the story of Hal Wallis' life and put it on the screen. 'Twould be enough to start another war.

U. S. 'Chinese Wall' Failed, Says Willkie

The attack on Pearl Harbor has destroyed the "fool's paradise of belief" that America itself is immune from attack, Wendell L. Willkie told the United States Conference of Mayors here last night.

"For more was destroyed at Pearl Harbor than ships and planes and human lives. Obsolete ideas and habits of thinking which made the destruction possible, went down with the Arizona," the 1940 Republican Presidential nominee declared.

"Never again can we cherish the blind illusion that disturbances in other parts of the world are no concern of ours. Never again can we place our trust in a Chinese wall of national aloofness."

Calls for Factory Mobilization

Willkie originally had planned in his address to the 300 mayors at a banquet in the Mayflower Hotel to urge selection of a single individual as head of the Nation's war production, but cut out the strong suggestion on learning an hour before the speech that the President intended to name Donald M. Nelson to the post. Willkie made no comment on the new development.

However, Willkie called for mobilization of "our unparalleled productive facilities" which "are but partially used."

"Again and again in recent weeks, we have seen men equipped with little but their courage opposed to the mechanical forces of a nation whose productive capacity is pigmy sized as compared to ours," Willkie said.

He declared:

"We need decisions, not discussions; we need planes, not predictions; we need tanks, not talk."

Warns Against Complacency

He demanded that America impose on itself a discipline to "match the fanatical fatalism" of the Nazis and Japanese. He demanded subordination of politics and group interests to the national welfare.

"Our Government must learn to set the pace for efficiency and unity," Willkie asserted. "For it is no means sure that we will win this war."

The Republican leader warned against "complacency . . . as deadly an enemy as Hitler himself," and he denounced the "loose talk" before Pearl Harbor about mopping up the Japanese with one hand in a few weeks.

"We are paying dearly for that overconfidence, but we still haven't absorbed the lesson," Willkie said.

Mayors Hear Nelson

Earlier in the day, the mayors were given an outline of the war effort by Nelson, executive director of SPAB; Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board of Governors; WPA Commissioner Howard O. Hunter, and other Federal officials.

Mayor LaGuardia is expected today to appoint a committee of mayors who will attempt to work out a plan that will obviate a complaint heard many times yesterday—where and how to find the proper Federal officials in connection with applications for materials on the priorities list.

Nelson suggested formation of such a group after he and Floyd B. Odlum, director of OPM's division of contract distribution, were told how mayors and other municipal authorities have been given the "run around" here.

Mayor Edward J. Kelly, of Chicago said that on each of his numerous trips here he had been "jumped all over town." Mayor James W. Kilner, of Hazleton, Pa., said he went Monday to Odlum's office, whence he was sent to the OPM labor division, then to the Army's Bureau of Ordnance, and finally routed back to Odlum's office.

Nelson Suggests Yardstick

Odlum informed the mayors that he is now working with LaGuardia on a plan to distribute among small manufacturers an appreciable portion of the job of producing 50 million dollars worth of fire-fighting equipment needed by various cities.

Both Odlum and Nelson warned against complacency, the former reminding that "the Axis powers still have a vast accumulation of weapons." Nelson urged the mayors to use only one yardstick in their consideration of projected developments—Is it in the interest of winning the war or in the interest of public health and safety?

Chairman Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board strongly recommended against any reduction in municipal taxes, a step which might be contemplated where the business boom increased revenues.

To cut city taxation, said Eccles, is to nullify in part the Federal effort against inflation. He urged that any surplus revenue be used to retire public debt or for investment in Federal securities.

WPA Chief Hunter reported to the conference that WPA is now employing about one million persons, or about one-half of the total number eligible.

Hinckley Heard

"Either we have the WPA for those who cannot get employment or we don't have it," said Hunter. "Either we make national unity and an all-out war effort mean what we say and therefore include in this effort all of the people, or we do not mean it and we will deliberately leave these people out of the economic lifestream and put them back on whatever kind of local relief you mayors and the Governors can get for them."

He recommended, first, a thorough effort to secure maximum employment in private industry; second, continuance of WPA while adjustment is taking place; third, provision by statute of a permanent framework for employment of persons on public projects as an integral part of the Federal Works Agency, thus eliminating the necessity for annual emergency legislation.

Robert H. Hinckley, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, reviewed development of civil aviation, pointing out the wartime value of the CAA program of flight training for college students, inaugurated several years ago.

"These training centers may prove to be the foundation of our all-out drive for air power," Hinckley said. He advised the mayors to promote airport construction and see to it that the flying fields are well protected.

threatened with contempt of court action—hill gave up the mailbags. Thus, said O'Connor, falsehood or no falsehood, the grand jury got the evidence it wanted.

Similarly, O'Connor claimed that Hill's statement about knowing Viereck had not hampered the jury, because Viereck was indicted, and now is awaiting trial, on charges of concealing his Capitol Hill propaganda activities when he registered with the State Department as a Nazi agent.

Special Prosecutor Hickey will answer O'Connor when court resumes at 10 o'clock this morning.

District Law Governs

Justice Letts ruled yesterday that if Hill is convicted he will face sentence under the District law, which provides a two to ten year prison term, without the alternative of a fine. O'Connor claimed when the trial began last Wednesday that Hill's crime came under the Federal law, which punishes perjury with a $2000 fine and up to five years in prison.

O'Connor obtained a three-and-a-half-hour recess yesterday, so he could study Dennett's testimony about Hill. Later he questioned John S. Gorrell, grand jury foreman and telephone engineer, about Dennett's appearance.

O'Connor told reporters he hoped the case would end today with a directed verdict. Failing this, O'Connor said, Hill's defense probably will require about two days.

by Reynolds.

A bill is now awaiting consideration by the Senate Appropriations Committee which would appropriate 40 million dollars for the construction of temporary office buildings in the Washington area.

Housing Units for 60,000

Also ready for introduction in the Senate and awaiting an estimate from the Commissioner of Public Buildings is a bill which would permit the building of housing units for some of the 60,000 workers expected to come to Washington by next July.

The Administration's statement last night indicates that it does not consider even these constructions adequate to take care of the increased defense population.

The McCarran resolution would require an open investigation of the Administration's plans. It declares that "we have been unable to obtain a citation of any statutory authority for any person or Government agency to order such removals."

Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, said at a press conference yesterday that he was opposed to removal of Government offices from Washington. There have been other evidences that the resolution will receive support in the Senate.

Meeting in joint sessions, members of the Senate and House District Committees have been seeking for the last month to block the decentralization orders.

metals necessary for military production, it was stated.

Effect on the average consumer of the ultimate pooling, blackout and conservation programs deemed necessary to increase production of the war "specialty" metals, is difficult to determine, officials said. The possibility was voiced that some industrial production for civilian purposes might have to be curtailed, in addition, it is fairly certain, at least in some areas, that the usual nighttime "downtown" brilliance of many American communities will become a thing of the past.

Rescued Dog, Owner Reunited; 100 Offered Home

By phone a hundred people asked for him—the mongrel rescued Sunday from a Potomac ice block—but never was he so happy as when his real owner, Erma Noble, Negro, 128 G Street Southwest, came for him yesterday afternoon.

They were reunited at the pound and Poundmaster Frank B. Marks said it was a happy scene, indeed, with the dog jumping all over his master in excitement. The master bought the dog a license and paid the $2 pound fee and they went happily home.

The 100 persons had called the pound offering the dog a home after they read of the dog straying onto the ice and police rescuing it.

Upholding A Racket

Rejection of the small-loans bill by the House on Monday has brought keen disappointment to thousands of low-income families in Washington. The District government has been working for years to break up the racket which nets loan sharks rich profits at the expense of the poor who find it necessary to borrow money without security. Congress had dodged the issue many times, but there was always hope that relief would ultimately come. Now the House has rejected the small-loans bill by a decisive vote, and the local government is thus left with no means of combating this despicable racket.

It is impossible to follow the reasoning of the House, if there was any reasoning. Some doubtless voted against permitting small unsecured loans at interest of 2 per cent a month out of a sincere but uninformed desire to protect the poor. The result of their stubborn rejection of the logic of facts is that the poor whom they sought to protect will have to pay from 3½ to 20 per cent a month. Thirty-five States now permit small loans at 3 and 3½ per cent a month to thwart the racketeers charging much more. Some Congressmen probably voted to protect the loan sharks of Virginia and Maryland who are now doing a huge business among Washingtonians at much higher rates than those proposed for the District. Perhaps, too, some feared that a 2 per cent rate in the Capital would undermine the higher rates fixed in most of the States. The extensive lobby maintained by the loan sharks does not hesitate to use any argument that will help to prevent effective regulation of their racket.

In any event Washington has been left utterly without safeguards against exploitation of the poor in this critical period. That fact is a biting reproach to Congress as a city council for the Nation's Capital. It has not merely failed but has positively refused to eliminate a situation declared to be outrageous by all who have investigated it.

Eve Of Rio

The conference of American foreign ministers which opens at Rio de Janeiro tomorrow promises to be the most important ever held in this hemisphere. For the agreements and understandings that will emerge from this parley will demonstrate the degree to which inter-American solidarity is more than a banquet phrase and the degree in which it has become a practical reality. For at the present moment the 21 republics are not a unit in their attitude toward the Second World War. Ten of them—the United States and nine Central American and Carribbean republics—are at war with all three of the Axis powers. An additional three—Mexico, Colombia and Venezuela—have broken off relations with Berlin, Rome and Tokyo. The remaining eight nations, all of them in South America, cling to a policy of neutrality, though a policy which at the same time leans in greater or lesser measure toward the United States.

This three-way split can be productive of considerable difficulties in view of the fact that Nazi Germany and her partners are a menace not only to us and our neighbors of the North American continent but also to all the nations of this hemisphere. Certainly it would be to Hitler's advantage to perpetuate the existing lines of cleavage and prevent the 21 republics from establishing a solid front to the enemies of all free nations. It is certainly to his interest to preserve in South America those Axis centers of propaganda, intrigue and sabotage which take their orders and cues from Axis diplomatic missions.

It may be too much to expect all the republics of the New World to follow our lead and the lead of the nine other Latin-American countries that have joined the United Nations group. But it is reasonable to expect, in view of their past professions of inter-American solidarity, that the South American republics will at least render the fullest possible support to the efforts being taken to keep the Axis out of this hemisphere. Just in what form they will do so or can be expected to do so the discussions at Rio during the coming ten days will determine. The task before the Rio gathering is momentous, but the opportunity to close ranks, to work shoulder to shoulder and to establish in this hemisphere that unity which is strength is also great.

Our Local Scandal

Washington was measured against the requirements of a war capital yesterday and found grievously wanting. Appearing before the Tolan Committee of the House in rapid succession, local officials outlined the city's appalling unpreparedness to meet the emergency that is already upon us. Witness after witness pointed out that the city's municipal services in the fields of health, welfare, education and housing were not even up to standard before the wartime rush Washingtonward began. Now the facilities are literally swamped by demands they cannot possibly meet with existing budgets and personnel.

"Any lag here, any inefficiency here," said Commissioner Young, "will echo 'round the world." If that is true, some thunderous noises will be circulating the globe in the coming months. For the simple fact is that Washington at present has no means at its command for meeting the emergency that the war has brought to its door. At every point it is at the mercy of Federal officials and legislators, many of whom, in the past, have shown little appreciation of the Capital City's problems. Commissioner Young bluntly informed the committee that "the local government cannot carry alone the load which has been thrust upon it and the load which will continue to be thrust upon it."

Evidence of an appalling shortage of housing was presented by the Washington Housing Association. Thirteen persons living in one room; a seven-room house occupied by six families; bootleg operators reaping enormous profits from the worst kind of slums; lax enforcement of obsolete laws on housing; vacancies even in the slums reduced to the vanishing point—such is the predicament in which the Capital has already been caught. "Housing conditions in Washington today," said John Ihlder, executive of the Alley Dwelling Authority, "are a definite handicap to the Nation's war effort and, unless they are improved, may cause a disastrous check to that effort. House and room overcrowding have reached menacing proportions. An epidemic, such as that of 1918, would be much more serious than a major military defeat."

Health Officer Ruhland repeated a now familiar story of the neglect of health in the Capital. For even its normal needs the city has an acute shortage of hospital beds, both public and private. It has less than half the number of public health nurses required to meet the standard fixed by the American Public Health Association. Syphilis runs riot, while clinics operate only part time for want of doctors and nurses. Director of Public Welfare Van Hyning drew a similar picture for the numerous institutions under his supervision. In addition, the loss of personnel because of higher salaries paid by the Federal Government has become a serious problem for welfare officials. The outlook for the schools is less dismal, but acute overcrowding and part-time classes in the Southeast remain unrelieved.

With people still flocking here at the rate of from 50,000 to 100,000 per year, Washington faces one of the most serious crises in its long history. And it is not simply a local crisis that can be disregarded because the city is disfranchised. Confusion, lack of morale, ill health and inefficiency at the Nation's nerve center are certain to be a heavy weight on the war effort. It is time for Congress to wake up and rescue its own Capital from a morass of social bungling that is scarcely less helpful to the enemy than well-aimed bombs over American territory.

Tire Thief

Mr. Westbrook Pegler was not exaggerating when he observed that the tire thief has now the social standing of the horse thief in frontier days. In Richmond the other day a man found guilty of stealing one secondhand automobile tire was given the maximum penalty by a judge who added that tires are now the equivalent of gold. Now Representative Cochran, of Missouri, wants tire stealing made a Federal offense. In a few months, perhaps, old passenger car tires will have become museum pieces like the once ubiquitous cigar store Indians. Thus, if it is true that history can be equated with transportation, we may have reached the end of an epoch. Unless some brand-new means of getting from place to place is quickly devised, we shall presently have to revert to the transportation methods of our ancestors.

It all seems to indicate that this business of mechanical progress has a very serious catch in it. A highly complex and highly organized society is in many ways more vulnerable to external attack than an economically primitive society, such as China, for example. Of course, it is probable that our access to supplies of raw rubber will soon be restored. It is equally probable that in the meantime we shall exploit in sufficient quantity some substitute as good as or better than the real thing. Thus at the end of the war we may be able to pick up the automobile age where we left it. Failing both these probabilities, we shall doubtless be able to resume the large-scale breeding of horses and other beasts of burden. Or, if it comes to the point where we must part forever with both mechanical and animal transportation, and become a peripatetic people dependent wholly upon our legs, we shall at least be in no worse case than were the Indians before us.

Labor Board

The first task of the new War Labor Board should be to set up standards upon which to operate. Absence of such standards bedeviled the work of the Mediation Board which the new board now supersedes. That body settled each dispute "solely on its own merits." The result was that recommendations were handed down, mainly in connection with the closed shop and its derivatives, which were misused by labor as precedents in the coal case. The lesson by this time should have been absorbed. Any delay in laying down in advance general standards for the guidance of the board in the mediation or arbitration of specific disputes would make for future trouble.

Take, for instance, the problem of wages. That is one of the major problems in industrial relations which cause disputes. No help at all in the formulation of a policy toward wages can be obtained from either of the price-control bills now in conference committee. Thus the new board in respect of wages is without a compass. The kind of wage policy that has hitherto been needed was advocated several times in this newspaper before war broke out. But now that we are committed to a war effort which will cost half the national income, the old criteria are inadmissible. This war can be financed only by sacrifice as well as work. If this does not become the standard of the War Labor Board, then we shall have inflation and labor is always the first to suffer in time of inflation.

There is no opportunity for the War Labor Board, alas, to fix a policy on the closed-shop issue. That has been done for it. The executive order setting up the board says that this issue is arbitrable, and in so doing the new board has been handed a Pandora box. Certainly the order shows a lack of consistency in the White House. On November 13 Mr. Roosevelt declared flatly that "the Government of the United States will not order, nor will Congress pass legislation ordering, the so-called closed shop." How, then, can the issue be arbitrable by a board set up under Government auspices? That it has become arbitrable, clearly, does not square with this declaration.

Nor is the pressing of this issue in accord with the national interest in time of war. If the changed times make a potent argument for the shelving of business and politics as usual, that applies with equal force to labor. The closed shop is a Kilkenny cat of an issue. It has been declared arbitrable over the heads of the leaders of industry who assembled in December to iron out with labor a no-strike and no-lockout formula. Thus differences will be promoted which will be distinctly hampering to the war effort. The closed shop has likewise been declared arbitrable in face of the known opposition of people and Congress. In a recent poll 77 per cent of the people questioned in a Gallup survey disapproved of the closed shop, and the House of Representatives in the Smith bill voted, 252 to 136, for a labor bill which would have frozen the open or closed shop status during what was then called the emergency. If closed-shop decisions are handed down, it is likely, therefore, that legislation which seems now to have been waived will be resurrected.

Scorched Earth

It looks as if the British are now adopting in earnest the scorched-earth policy against the advancing Japanese. Kuala Lumpur, the rubber capital of Malaya, has been left a shell. It has been stripped of everything of value under what is called an "authorized salvage" program. Even the stores have been thrown open for the natives to help themselves. No doubt the new policy and the vigor with which it has been applied is due to what members of the House of Commons have called the "scandal" of Penang. Penang is north of Kuala Lumpur, and the Japanese fell heir to smelting works, stocks of tin, gasoline and rubber. Even barges were captured intact. With these boats the Japanese were enabled to effect further landings farther south. Penang created such a stir in London that new orders, evidently, have been sent out to Malaya. The current and pending destruction is more than unfortunate, but in the Pacific there is a formidable foe, and only this kind of ruthlessness will beat him.

CITIES

Your cities have betrayed you, prideful men!
The gates you set against the enemy
In sudden thunder like a wave go down;
Your towers crumble and each stone is free.
Thus is their strength a lesser thing than yours,
A lesser thing than blood and bone and faith;
Listen! Hear how a falling city pours
A sound of sorrow mightier than death!
Leave now their false and smoking promises,
Turn to the humble land from whence you came,
Which fired the light into your lonely eyes,
Within your eager breast gave love its flame.
Sink deep the furrow; safe in your heart, your hand,
The green, unbroken promise of the land.

District Defense Housing

If the Government had liberalized its policy on defense housing in the District of Columbia, there would be today enough new buildings here to take care of the Governmental offices ordered away due to inadequate space.

The Government wants garden-type apartments, which cannot be built in the metropolitan area due to cost of ground. Building in Maryland and Virginia to meet the needs of Governmental offices to be built there is wise. But, to totally ignore the demands already existing in the District of Columbia for office and apartment space is equally unwise. The ground is available in downtown Northwest Washington to meet the situation if the Government had made it possible to secure materials and rentals commensurate with the cost. Forcing those employed in the metropolitan area into distant suburbs adds to cost of transportation and an added burden to an already overtaxed traffic system. The Government took over as offices a few new apartments recently finished, and more would be available today if it had not been for unreasonable restrictions.

Further to slow down operations, it is necessary for builders to submit to the FHA several volumes covering defense materials. The Government also says "no elevator," but they find it advisable themselves to use elevators when building dormitories in the metropolitan area.

The whole trouble seems to be that there are no men in some branches of the Government familiar with and caring about the local situation; there are entirely too many young, inexperienced men in some of the offices; and those who are experienced in the housing field are prevented from doing anything constructive due to Governmental regulations. Office Space

As an architect I want to commend the article in The Post by Mr. Charles J. Kappler relative to additional stories to the old Land Office and Postoffice Buildings. The present exterior walls of each building are plenty good for three additional stories and a careful survey may develop the fact that due to our modern type of construction, four stories can be added to each building. The present frieze cornice and parapet of each building can be removed and placed atop the new additions and independent downward system can be installed for the additional plumbing, wiring and heating. Then, too, the story heights of the new floors can be less than the present ones, thereby reducing the dead load on the walls. These additional floors will add a tremendous amount of additional floor space at a reasonable cost and in a location convenient for the coming and going of the employes and thereby increase their efficiency for the duties they must perform. Congressional Leadership

The present House of Representatives reveals a deplorable decay in leadership. While discussing the appropriation for civilian defense, it was notorious that the House was opposed to the continuation of the two offices of Director of Civil Defense and Mayor of New York under the operation of one man. This is in accord with the almost unanimous weight of editorial opinion in New York City that justice to the office of Mayor of New York demands full attention from the occupant.

Informally in committee the House voted almost 2 to 1 against the mayor, but when the roll call was ordered the margin was much less, 187 against the mayor, 168 for continuing him as a doubleheader. The pettiness of party leaders will prevail over common sense.

The President dislikes to confess error. He nominated LaGuardia when civilian defense was almost a myth, as many thought with a benevolent hope of helping the New York Mayor in his campaign for reelection.

Time was when Congress maintained its parliamentary power with dignity. Its leadership once distinguished has become pathetic, crude and commonplace. Logic, skill in argument or eloquence are qualities that no longer exist in the House of Representatives. Several times during the past session did the top-heavy majority unseat its apparent leader on the floor.

'Enemy Aliens' Espouse Allied Cause

It was with deep satisfaction, and feelings of gratitude, that we Austrians read in The Washington Post your magnificent article entitled "Strange Enemies."

That an important paper like The Washington Post takes such a direct interest in our situation is for us a new proof of the great sympathy which your generous country has shown to my unfortunate homeland. The question of Austria has always found in the Western Hemisphere an enlightened understanding. We will never forget the words which your great President in nearly every one of his addresses spoke about Austria. And your good neighbors, like Brazil—the great and beautiful country in which I spent unforgettable years of my life—have also never ceased to show us that they believed in justice for Austria.

For too many persons Austria is only the country of laughter, dance and music. Yes, we were a country easygoing and liberal. But our people never has faltered in its duty in the hour of decision. We fought Hitler alone from 1933 to 1938. If we finally succumbed, it was due to our numerical weakness and to the spirit of appeasement which swept Europe in those days.

But even after the horrors of German occupation our people at home continued and continues a stubborn underground resistance to the invader. It is up to now the unique way in which our nation could show that it stands where it stood for five years of a lonely desperate fight.

As for us Austrians living in the free world there is today one goal: to be allowed to fight on the side of the United States and its allies for freedom. We want to see our flag beside The Star-Spangled Banner on the battlefields of the world. We want to fight in the protection of our common sacred principles and help our comrades inside Austria to regain the complete independence of our country.

WALTER VON SCHUSCHNIGG,
Former Austrian Consul in Rio de Janeiro.

Washington, Jan. 6.

There is a fact still more strikingly inconsistent than the one mentioned by you: The Sudeten Germans are "friendly aliens," here and in Great Britain, whereas the Austrian Germans are "enemies."

Munich, i. e., the carving-up of Czecho-Slovakia, was achieved with the consent and approval of Great Britain, whereas Austria had been raped a few months before without British authorization. Hence the incorporation of the Sudetens into Germany was recognized more solemnly than that of Austria.

I am very far from sharing the view that the Sudeten Germans are Nazi to a greater extent than the Austrians. Certainly, the tendency toward union with Germany was stronger among the Sudeten Germans since they were not treated fairly by the Czechs. Today they can be regarded as cured of Pan-Germanism. What I want to show is that the Austrians in this country and in Great Britain ought to be treated like the Sudeten Germans, i. e., as friends as long as they don't deserve individually to be dealt with as enemies. A few months ago Mr. Peake, undersecretary of the British home office, said in the Commons: "It is clear that enemy agents are more likely to be found in the ranks of neutral and friendly aliens than among enemy aliens or British subjects."

Much more important than the personal fate of Austrians in the United States is, of course, the effect upon the Austrians at home and, first of all, on those in the German forces. How can they be expected to risk their lives by acts of sabotage or open revolt as long as they don't know whether they will be put in the dock together with the Germans after Hitler's fall? DR. FRANZ KLEIN.

May I congratulate you on the article, "Austrians as Aliens," and on the accompanying leader in the same number of your paper. Whilst I agree with the anonymous author of the article that we are temperamentally and spiritually, and politically, of course, individualists, I hope that we are not, however, an "unorganizable lot." I think the very fact of our surviving individualism should prove that we are essentially friendly, very friendly aliens. E. R. W.

Washington, Jan. 6.

The editor of The Post really deserves the thanks from all former Austrians for the publication of the sympathetic editorial and of the article, "Austrians as Aliens," in The Post of January 6.

As a matter of fact it may be interesting to state that the authorities in this country do not always deal with the Austrian question in such a "pro-German" way as your author points out.

I left Vienna immediately after the "anschluss" with my Austrian passport and received my quota immigration visa to this country in Paris, France, in October, 1938. In June, 1939, I took out my first papers in the District Court of Washington, D. C., and insisted that my nationality be described as "Austrian." My "Austrian" nationality was filed under the Alien Registration Act and later under the Selective Service Act; I simply insisted that the clerk write down "Austrian" nationality and it was never corrected. ROBERT RIE.

Washington, Jan. 6.

An editorial in your January 6 number deals deftly with the difference between Austrians and Germans; yet on the front page of your January 8 number I read the following headline: "Three German Ski Experts Held by FBI as Enemy Aliens," whereas the ski instructors in question are not German but Austrian.

May I suggest that instead of confining these unquestionably able ski instructors to idleness they should be given jobs as trainers of United States ski troops—yes, even if they were Nazi sympathizers. A bold suggestion, no doubt; but, if one bethinks it, not an unfeasible one. Besides, in times like ours it's the bold suggestion which counts.

The Post Impressionist

Malayan Interlude

On our way eastward around the world, we put in at the City of Singapore one sultry afternoon in late May. As he had promised to do, a young Dutchman who had been a shipmate on an earlier ship, we having stopped off in Japan, met us at the pier. He looked very casual and cool in his shorts and shirt of white linen, sun helmet in one of his brown hands, his curly blonde hair glistening in the strong sunlight.

"Cheerio!" he greeted us, his former shipmates, and then politely singled out a gentleman from Boston and myself to have a "lemon squash" with him at the Raffles Hotel.

He had been on leave—in Holland and in the United States and had just returned—that is, on the ship before our own—to his post as a Shell Oil Co. executive on the first and smallest of the Dutch East Indies, Palue Samboe, lying about an hour and a half by motor launch off Singapore. And it was to this tiny island, a miniature world in itself, that he invited the gentleman from Boston and myself to be his dinner or, rather, "tiffin" guests on the following day, a Sunday.

Supplied with a pass that read: "Admit two white Europeans to the motor launch bound for Palue Samboe at 11 a. m.," we started out on foot for the dock. The city of Singapore bustling the day before had about it now an air of Sunday calm. Shops were closed and only those, Europeans and Malayans in Sunday-best, who were on their way to divine service were to be seen in the streets. We soon discovered the city to be the seat of an Episcopal cathedral, typically English, set in the usual close.

"Here on Palue Samboe," our host explained, "we can the oil that is brought from the wells of Sumatra and Java and thus make it ready for shipment to other parts of the world. See——" His foot indicated a battered oil can, pressed into the earth to form a step. "Nothing goes to waste here. I suppose we are terribly self-sufficient."

We walked on and, quite as if we had crossed a dividing line, stepped into a lushly vegetated portion of the island. Then we noticed that these were back yards like those in Boston or Brooklyn—and, one to a yard, we saw white stucco houses.

"This is my house," our host explained, leading the way around front where, most surprisingly, was a step that led up to the second story of the typically Dutch abode. A barefooted Malayan boy opened the screen door for us and we entered what might have been a living room in an apartment on Park Avenue in Manhattan.

Our host had already told us that his wife and two small children had remained behind in Amsterdam, so that the children might enjoy their first real Holland Christmas. Now he apologized for his own housekeeping, telling us that he had just brought out most of the furniture from the States. It looked the part—overstuffed davenport—an assortment of easy chairs, end tables, an American radio and an Oriental rug. It was difficult to believe that, through the very wide window, one was looking out on water that flowed into the Indian Ocean.

My companion and I both exclaimed at once about the beauty of the Flame of the Forest or Royal Poinciana trees that lined the waterfront street in front of the house in the row of similar houses in which, our host said, lived about 50 Dutch people, men, women and small children.

Tiffin consisting of the famed Javanese rice-plate, rice-and-shrimp bread and a native pudding, the cook being from Java, was served in a typically Dutch dining room by the same Malayan boy who had let us into the house. Since our stay had necessarily to be brief, our ship being scheduled to sail in the early evening for Penang, our host suggested that, despite the mid-day heat, we go on a tour of inspection of the island. It was, as he had pointed out, a miniature world in itself. There were not only the oil company's buildings—a refinery, a cannery and various offices—but there were, besides, a general store, a hospital and several schools. But most interesting of all was the fact that each group of workers, there being not only the Dutch officials and their families but Chinese, Japanese Javanese, Cingalese and Malayans among the workers, had a settlement of its own, typical of its kind. It amused us particularly to see the Chinese coolies squatted in the street between their rows of low dwellings, preparing chow on small portable stoves.

We ended our tour of inspection at the Dutch officials' clubhouse where, on the veranda, we sipped lemon squash and nibbled rice cakes.

We had not been saying very much—but rather, in silence, enjoying the view of the blue water when my companion exclaimed: "We'd better be leaving or we might miss the boat—not that I'd mind too much staying here."

"It is pleasant," our host agreed. "Still, it grows monotonous—and the heat is very trying. Then, at Christmas, one misses being at home. It's the sort of place where nothing much ever happens—or ever will, I suppose. But, if you feel you must, we'll get along and stop by at the house for a moment."

Once again inside the living room, we sat down when our host insisted that we had plenty of time to catch the next launch. We chatted pleasantly, forgetting momentarily that time existed. Then my companion glanced at his watch and warned—"We'd better be dash."

"Yes; yes; too bad—but you must," our host agreed sorrowfully. Then, snatching up a heavy volume that lay on a cluttered table, he insisted: "Take this along; why not? Give you something to read and I'll never get around to it. Someone gave it to me when I left the States."

"What is it?" my companion queried absently.

"Mein Kampf," I told him. "By that Hitler. Well, we'll take it along for ballast. Thanks a lot."

Australian Defense

By Ernest Lindley

Guns And Bombs Are Getting Close

DISPATCHES from Australia reveal that American reinforcements are expected there, further confirming the impression that the Pacific strategy agreed upon during the Roosevelt-Churchill talks calls for holding and developing Australia as a base. Pacific distances are so vast that it is easy to forget what every school child learns: that Australia is approximately as large as the continental United States, but with a population of only about seven million people.

LINDLEY

When the Pacific war began, Australia seemed a long way from Japan, and well protected on the north by a thick screen of islands—the Dutch East Indies, Bismarck Archipelago, Solomon Islands and others, with the Philippines still farther north—and by the great naval base at Singapore. But the Japanese, streaming southward with unchecked speed, have swiftly altered the picture.

Singapore is already unusable—at least temporarily—as a fleet base. The Japanese have been able to move their air power too close to it. If held as a fortress it may still be useful for refueling submarines and light surface craft, and may prevent the Japanese from moving through the Straits of Malacca into the Indian Ocean. But some air experts are doubtful that, even if held as a fortress, Singapore can serve this limited purpose. In any event, the Japanese may be able to batter the naval installations so thoroughly from the air that they will be useless for years to come.

THE JAPANESE already control a considerable length of the Malay side of the Straits of Malacca, and if they succeed in moving across to Sumatra they will control both sides and make this supply route for Singapore and the East Indies unusable.

Farther east the Japs have already made landings on both the east and west coasts of Borneo and in the Celebes, and are moving southward on these two islands. One more jump, to Timor or one of the smaller islands east of Java, would put them athwart the long southern sea and air route from the United States to the East Indies, via Port Darwin, Australia. Java, the most populous and richest of the East Indies, and the main seat of Dutch military, naval and air power, would be left isolated, for practical purposes. The Sunda Straits, between Sumatra and Java, are one of the two main channels between the Pacific and Indian Oceans—the other being, of course, the Straits of Malacca.

There is no way of knowing where the Japanese will strike next or hardest, but they are moving fast, both to attack the key points and to cut the long, slender lines of communication in the southwest Pacific. Darwin, Australia, is an important part of this whole system of communications. It is a fortified naval and air station, and one of only two small population centers along the almost uninhabited northern coast of Australia. It is connected with the more populous southeastern part of the continent only by sea and by one combination motor and rail route. Darwin is within the area put under the supreme command of Gen. Wavell.

DEFENSE of the main part—the east coast, and especially the southeast—presents different problems. The principal cities and munitions centers are on the coast, several of them within easy bombarding range of hostile naval units, not to mention carrier-borne planes. The only north-and-south rail line runs along the coast.

If they break through into the Indian Ocean, the Japanese can make Australian sea communications with India, Suez, and around Africa to Great Britain and the United States, difficult. If they should move into New Caledonia, the large Free French island about 800 miles east of Australia, they could harass the southern sea route between the main Australian ports and the United States, and even between Australia and New Zealand. New Caledonia is a prize in itself because of its nickel mines.

THE DISTANCES are vast, but the Japanese have proved again that distance is less important than time and force. With good fortune, the Japanese drive southward may be brought to a halt on the main southern line of the East Indies. But a break-through admittedly is possible. In either event the defense of Australia and of its lines of communication with the United States is highly important strategically as well as sentimentally. This requires reinforcements, especially in the air. From Australia they can be moved out to wherever the far-flung south Pacific battle-front may be.

The Australians have already sent to the Near East and Singapore military forces comparable, in relation to their population, to our expeditionary force to France in the first World War, and New Zealand has done as well, or better. They have a relatively large home defense force, a small navy, a small air force, and a small but important munitions industry.

The Australians have ground to feel much as the British did when they saw the Nazis slicing through the Lowlands and France. The guns and the bombs are getting close. The British had to stand alone in dark days, but there were 40 million of them, and they had a large munitions industry, an immense fleet, and a strong air force on home territory. Even now, judging from the London accounts, they are thrilled because the "Yanks are coming." The Australians are tough and self-reliant, with fighting qualities that have become legendary, but there are not many of them and they are a long way off.

Access To Burma

By Hallum Movius

Geography Defies Japan

JAPAN'S MILITARY machine faces a formidable enemy—geography—in its effort to cut China's lifeline, the Burma Road. Even modern warfare's mechanized units can be seriously handicapped by natural barriers—as Hitler found on the subzero Moscow front. In southeastern Asia, Burma's natural boundaries should be an ace up the sleeve of the British and Chinese.

Access to Burma from Indo-China is virtually impossible. There is neither a bridge over the Mekong River nor a road of any description from Luangprabang in Indo-China, a natural invasion point, to Kentung in eastern Burma. Though both could be built in time, they would require a long and delicate engineering feat to penetrate the rugged border terrain.

Japan has now coerced unhappy Thailand into submission—a sad fate for a "land of the free" whose independence dates back 500 years. On the flat, printed map of American amateur strategists it would now seem an easy step from Thailand to Burma. Siam's central plain appears to be a simple stepping-stone in the direction of Rangoon, Burma's chief port and capital.

YET HERE geography steps in to halt Japan, in the form of the Dawna Mountains and the Salween River. Only from Moulmein are there good communications with Rangoon—a road and a railroad—but the Japanese can only get to Moulmein by air. The case would be altered, of course, if Japan controlled the sea lanes and could force entry at Rangoon in this way. As yet, however, no Japanese fleet would dream of invading the Bay of Bengal in force.

The only alternative route open to Japan stretches across the northern boundary of Siam, far inland. Nipponese troops can march from Chiengmai in Siam northward to Kentung in Burma; the road between these points is fairly good. Kentung is a large native village set in a broad valley and surrounded by a 7000-foot range of mountains. The fact that this valley once held a huge lake—about 25 miles long and 15 miles wide—is significant; it is an ideal site for an airport and probably has been developed for this purpose by the British.

But even if Japan takes Kentung it must push ahead toward Mandalay if it wants to sever the Burma Road; and geography has erected several sizable hurdles which must first be overcome. From Kentung to the Salween River the crude existing road crosses no less than three ranges varying from 6000-7000 feet above sea level; mechanized divisions must climb treeless summits and dip down steeply into narrow gorges and ravines which should be easy to defend. Indeed, vital sections of the road itself could be so easily defended that a few hundred properly equipped men might well hold up an army for months. Then there are climatic perils, of which the chief is the malarial mosquito.

A JAPANESE FORCE would then have to ferry or span the Salween and the Nam Pang Rivers. The current in the Salween, one of Asia's great rivers, is so strong that a pontoon bridge could not be installed. The Nam Pang could easily be crossed by pontoons—if the pontoons could be brought here from Siam; the present ferry consists of a native raft which is paddled across. If these rivers could be conquered, the weary Japs would then be confronted by a powerful British force stationed at Taunggyi, the capital of the southern Shan States. Even from Taunggyi the route to Mandalay is tortuous and round-about.

What would be the effect of such an invasion on the Burmese themselves? The newspapers tell us that Burma is struggling under British authority, but this struggle is not so desperate that the Burmese would turn on the British in a crisis. The Burmese, in fact, would react in just the opposite manner, for they hate both the Japanese and the Thais with the same genuine hatred that the southern Slavs hold for the Italians.

HOME RULE has been the issue in Burma's politics; but the British have guaranteed home rule on an identical basis as our guarantee to the Philippines—some observers feel that this is to be an experiment in Britain's goal to grant home rule for India itself. Further, as long as supplies flow through Burma to China, an era of comparative prosperity exists in Burma, bolstering the morale of Burmese troops.

The defensive position of Burma is, then, fairly strong. There is always the chance that the Japanese might use "para-troops," but there would be little chance of supplying these advance guards. The chief threat of the Burma Road still comes from bombing, and American and British fighter planes now patrol this artery of democracy.

Japan has gained two objectives in its occupation of Thailand: a base to strike south into Malaya toward Singapore and possession of a rich source of rice and other foodstuffs. But a third objective—access to the Burma Road—will be a difficult one to achieve.

War Labor Board

By Mark Sullivan

Prospects Of Labor Legislation

THE PRESIDENT has appointed what is called a "War Labor Board." This is the end, for the moment, of a series of events which the public should understand.

SULLIVAN

On December 3 the House passed a bill having to do with labor unions and labor relations. The bill was not merely an emergency measure having to do with strikes in defense industries. It was a comprehensive measure, having to do with many aspects of labor relations. It was the fruit of three years of intermittent hearings and debates, prolonged and thorough, on all aspects of labor relations. The bill dealt with, among other aspects: Strikes by unions, lockouts by employers, mediation, boycotts, picketing in general, picketing of workers' homes, registry of labor unions, publicity for financial affairs of unions, the closed shop.

That the bill dealt with these subjects is all that is said here. Nothing is said here about the merit of the bill, or of its parts. For the purpose of the present column, it is enough to say the measure was passed by the House. It was passed overwhelmingly, by a vote of 252 to 136—practically 2 to 1. Plainly, the House felt that Congress ought to legislate on labor relations. There was much evidence that the country felt so too.

THE BILL went to the Senate. There, it went to the Committee on Labor and Education. There were charges or intimations that this committee, and its chairman, Senator Elbert D. Thomas, of Utah, might be unsympathetic to the bill. On the floor of the Senate, Mr. Connally, of Texas, intimated that Senator Thomas' committee sometimes practices delay, or otherwise kills, bills having to do with labor relations. This charge, however, while an important matter, is not material here. No opinion is here expressed about it.

As respects the present bill, Senator Thomas, under some pressure from Senators favoring action on it, said he was willing to expedite hearings. He said that his committee "likely could be ready to make a report the following week."

That was on December 8. The "following week" would be the week beginning December 15.

BEFORE the following week arrived, before the Senate Labor Committee could take action on the House bill, it received a request from some members of the Administration. They included Secretary of Labor Perkins, the labor head of OPM, Mr. Sidney Hillman, and others. Their request was that the Senate Labor Committee defer action, on the House bill or any other labor measure. They put their request on the ground that the President was about to take a step about labor relations on his own account.

To this request the Senate Labor Committee assented. There was assent not only by members friendly to the Administration and believed to oppose labor legislation. There was assent also by Senators who wished labor legislation. These assumed that after the President had taken whatever step he contemplated, the Senate would then resume consideration of labor legislation.

On December 17, the President called a "labor-industry" conference, made up of 12 labor leaders, 12 heads of industries. These could not agree. They all, however, accepted an agreement presented by a representative of the President. The agreement was:

"(1) There shall be no strikes or lockouts. (2) All disputes shall be settled by peaceful means. (3) The President shall set up a proper war labor board to handle these disputes."

THE WAR labor board thus provided for has now been named by the President. It consists of four labor leaders, four industrial leaders, and four supposed to be impartial representatives of the public.

The War Labor Board, and the whole step taken by the President, has to do with one area of labor relations alone, limited in scope and in time. It is limited to "the duration of the war." And it is limited to labor disputes in war industries—in the words of the President's executive order: "labor disputes which might interrupt work which contributes to the effective prosecution of the war."

In this situation, two important conditions stand out:

Whatever is now done about labor relations in war industries is not to rest on law. It does not derive from any act of Congress. It is wholly on the authority and within the hands of, the President and his appointees.

About the broad area of labor relations in general, nothing is done. Congress started to legislate on it. Congress was interrupted by a request made by the Administration to the Labor Committee of the Senate. Unless now the Senate resumes action and insists that its labor committee resume action—the result will be no labor legislation. Such legislation has been knocking at the door of Congress for more than three years.

The Gallup Poll

Public Sentiment Found Evenly Divided On U. S. Sales Tax to Help Pay War Costs

By Dr. George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Jan. 13—President Roosevelt's implied approval of a general sales tax in his budget message has brought increased interest in sales tax proposals on Capitol Hill. Many Congressmen believe that the huge revenues necessary for war cannot be raised unless some kind of sales levy is imposed in addition to other taxes.

While the amount of new taxation needed is for experts to decide, the kind of taxes levied is a matter on which the attitude of the public—the ultimate taxpayer—is important. Would the majority of Americans approve a national sales levy?

An American Institute of Public Opinion survey indicates that the country is almost evenly divided in sentiment on a sales tax; that it is less popular in cities than in farm areas, and less popular among low income voters than among those in the more well-to-do brackets.

The attitude today is indicated in the following study:

"In order to help pay the cost of the war, should the Federal Governme..t put a national sales tax of 2 per cent on everything you buy, in addition to taxes now in effect?"

APPROVE SALES TAX ..47%
DISAPPROVE 46
UNDECIDED 7

Ever since the outbreak of the European war in 1939, the American public has been willing to dig down in its pockets for increased taxes for defense. That fact was established in many Institute surveys. The majority were willing to pay more income taxes, and to broaden the income tax base to an extent even greater than that voted by Congress.

But all during the period of the defense emergency public sentiment has always been divided on the proposition of a general sales tax. In January, 1941, for example, an Institute survey found 42 per cent in favor, 49 per cent opposed and 9 per cent undecided. In April of last year the vote of approval went to 50 per cent, but declined subsequently as it became evident that greatly increased income taxes would be levied.

As might be expected, the greatest opposition to the sales tax comes from the lower economic levels, where the typical attitude is "we have too many taxes now" and "a sales tax would pinch the poor people more than the rich."

The vote by income groups is as follows:

	Favor Sales Tax	Oppose	Undecided
Upper Income Group ...	58%	34%	8%
Middle Income Group ...	48	46	6
Lower Income Group ...	43	50	7

Reaction to a sales levy apparently varies directly with size of community as well as income. Farmers polled in the survey were more inclined to favor sales taxes than persons living in towns, or medium sized cities or large cities, as the following table indicates:

	Favor Sales Tax	Oppose	Undecided
Farmers ...	53%	29%	8%
Towns Under 10,000 ...	49	44	7
10,000-100,000 ...	46	46	8
Over 100,000 ...	41	54	5

The two areas of the country most in favor were the East Central and Southern states; in the other sections the vote against a sales tax was slightly larger than the vote for it.

Fair Enough

Tough Guy Needed

NOTE to editors:

LET'S quit printing those poisonously optimistic cut-lines under the news service photographs of tanks, bombers and the like, shot in long perspective so as to create an illusion of plenty, which speaks of these vehicles as "rolling off the assembly lines." They aren't rolling off the assembly lines and these pictures, and especially the cut-lines, give a dangerously false impression. If the pictures come with ready-made cut-lines, edit the cut-lines 'way down. You don't need to say the tanks and bombers are stationary on the assembly lines, because, of course, they are inching along slowly, but they aren't rolling off like flivers as the pictures have suggested they are and nobody knows it better than Hitler and the only people who are deceived by the exaggeration are the Americans who shouldn't be hopped up with such habit-forming encouragement.

The fact is that the rate of production to date is a disgrace to the greatest industrial nation on earth and a menace to life and liberty.

It wouldn't be the worst idea, or a false one, either, to put across the suggestion that it is no dead sure thing that the United States is going to be on the winning side of this war. The beating we have taken in the Pacific is not comparable to other setbacks in other wars, because there is no basis of comparison, but there is not a single ray of consolation and it might prove to have been the worst in American history and one of the worst in all history.

IF WE DON'T spit on our hands, pull up our socks and begin to realize those fatuous lines about heavy war stuff "rolling off the assembly lines" this country might get licked and never mind what the Russians are doing to Hitler or how many German generals get fired or how much the Italians really hate the Heinies in their hearts.

When we have developed a minute imitation of the Russian efficiency it might be all right to begin to look at our muscles in the glass and say, "How well we are looking," but that ain't yet and it won't be tomorrow or six months from now.

Do you want a one-word description of our rate of production? You don't want to be kidded, do you? All right then, the word is awful, which is short for bloody-awful awful.

Who is to blame? You, me, us, everybody—and that goes for the President of the United States as well as for John Lewis and the dirty bolos who were holding back production until Hitler struck Russia. But the only people who are reduced to blame-placing as a national sort are losers, as we may observe in France, where they are blaming the Communists, the Jews, the Masons, the 200 families and even the British and us. Victorious nations don't place blame for their victories and this country still can turn to and make the stuff, although there has been a horrible waste of time already and we are still wrangling and haggling over degrees of authority and the closed shop.

A LOT of our trouble has been just apathy, personal, individual, let-George-do-it indifference and we have been retarded also by the dreadful confusion and headlessness of the effort here in Washington which, I am afraid, is the President's rag-doll.

There is just no head man, no tough guy with authority to make brutal decisions, issue orders and compel obedience. Just to show you how the whole disorganized mess admires and pines for such a tough guy I can report that at this writing the man who commands most respect in the Capital, next to the President, himself, of course, is Leon Henderson, who had the gumption to say that, with small reservations, there would be no more tires for pleasure cars. The boss could appoint him head of production tomorrow and even industry would forget his dream-book ideas of economics and give him a good substantial yell.

I have got a candidate who would be even better in action, but I want to save his name for the end, so I can have the last word. Otherwise I would be mobbed by all the pinkoes and bleeding hearts and the greedy and power-hungry ignoramuses of the union racket.

My man is as tough as Henderson. He is as dirty in a fight as an eye-gouging New Dealer and on his record he is so much better at producing hard stuff out of big factories than any of your ivy-league lawyers, social workers, punk poets or misanthropic failure of the newspaper business that no comparison is possible. He met that beetle-browed bulldozer John L. Lewis toe-to-toe and ripped the belly right out of him with body punches and knocked him through the skylight.

He is one of the most valuable men in the United States and most of his ability is being wasted now in an aircraft job that isn't one-fiftieth of his size.

His name is Tom Girdler.

A Matter of Timing

By Barnet Nover

Pearl Harbor And German Army Purge

IF THE FULL FACTS of the events leading up to Japan's sudden and treacherous assault on the United States and Great Britain are ever made known they may reveal the Japanese militarists as guilty of as monumental a piece of bad timing as the world has ever seen.

NOVER

So far the Japanese have been triumphant almost everywhere on the far flung Pacific front. Nowhere, except at Changsha and in air battles over Rangoon, have the Allies managed to hold back the Japanese flood. This would seem to give retrospective justification, at least from a military point of view, to the ambitious Japanese bid for Far Eastern hegemony.

Yet the war in the Pacific is still in its early stages. The Allied powers have not yet mobilized their full strength. The blows they have suffered have been serious, but they have not been fatal. On the other hand, the Japanese victories, while spectacular, have certainly not been conclusive. For Japan to win it is not enough for her to win in the Pacific; such a victory must be accompanied by a parallel triumph by Japan's Axis allies in Europe and Africa.

THE QUESTION arises, then, whether, at the moment when the military clique pressed the button that was to lead to a simultaneous assault on Pearl Harbor, Wake, Guam, Hongkong, Thailand and Malaya, they anticipated the Axis to be victorious.

The answer to this question must certainly be in the affirmative. If Gen. Tojo and his followers had entertained any grave doubt, in the weeks before December 7, regarding a Hitler triumph in Europe it is very probable that they would have held their hand. To be sure, the trade embargo was beginning to press down on Japan and, together with the expansion of American armaments, altering the balance of power in the all-important battle of production.

Moreover, the Japanese militarists had to consider the possibility that if they waited too long before taking on the United States, Great Britain and the Netherlands, the last opportunity to establish the coprosperity sphere in East Asia would disappear. Yet the care that obviously went into Japan's preparations for the Pacific war gives the lie to the theory that Gen. Tojo and his colleagues were indulging in glorified hara-kiri. The only reasonable assumption is that on December 7 the Japanese leaders were not only convinced that they could win in the Pacific but that Hitler would win in Europe.

THE CHRONOLOGY of events that occurred in the weeks before Pearl Harbor is, in this respect, highly illuminating.

On October 2 Hitler launched a major offensive on Moscow, announcing that this was to be the last great battle of the year and would end with the complete destruction of Russia's fighting capacity. Just two weeks later, with the German offensive in full swing, Premier Prince Konoye's government gave up the ghost and was succeeded by a government headed, for the first time in Japanese history, by a general in active service, Gen. Hideki Tojo.

Now the Konoye government, for all that it had adopted as its own the foreign policy of the extremists, had, nonetheless shown a certain measure of reserve toward the Axis. At least it was not wholly convinced that Hitler's triumph was a certainty. It wanted to wait and see how the war in Russia would actually come out and, while waiting, sought at least a temporary modus vivendi with the United States.

The coming into power of the Tojo government in October can, in view of what happened subsequently, be interpreted as the victory in Japan of those who were convinced that the Axis was about to triumph in Europe and that one of the important considerations that led them to this belief was the great German offensive in October.

It was about that time that Otto Dietrich, the Nazi press chief, declared that "the campaign in the East is decided."

The next weeks proved that Dietrich had spoken out of turn. The German drive in the east made progress but the Russian army was not crushed. By early November the possibility began to arise that the German army might not take Moscow but would have to suspend operations and go into winter quarters. That would mean a German-Russian stalemate of between four and five months duration.

It would also mean that, despite her losses of men and materiel, Russia would remain a formidable threat to Japan's rear, in the event that Japan went on the warpath against the United States and Britain. A continued German drive in Russia was, therefore, the necessary accompaniment of a Japanese drive in the Pacific.

IN GERMANY, however, the slowing up of Hitler's "last great battle of 1941" appears to have given rise to doubts in the minds of the German high command as to the wisdom of continuing an effort which might not only prove costly but, if unsuccessful, result in disaster. It is most unlikely that the Japanese were unaware of this dispute between Hitler and his generals. They must have viewed it with perturbation.

On November 5 dispatches from Berne, London and Kuibyshev stated that the German drive on Moscow had been stalled in mud. On that day Tokyo announced that Saburo Kurusu was en route to Washington to assist Admiral Nomura in negotiations with the United States.

THE OVERWHELMING belief in this country is that the Kurusu mission was an attempt to throw dust in the eyes of this country, fool us by holding out an olive branch while the Japanese militarists were preparing to stab this country in the back. Undoubtedly this was part of Japan's strategy. Is it not possible, however, that Kurusu was sent to the United States for the additional purpose of putting pressure on Berlin to go ahead with the offensive in Russia? The time-table of events seems to suggest it was.

With Kurusu resuming the broken-off negotiations with the United States Hitler could be told that if he decided to accept a stalemate in Russia Japan would make a deal with this Nation; if, on the other hand, he agreed to go ahead Japan would join in the war. To this, as is apparent, Hitler agreed. To get Japan into the war he was prepared to ignore the advice of his generals and make a second attempt to capture Moscow.

By the end of November this second great offensive against Moscow was in full swing, with Russian spokesmen admitting that the Soviet capital faced its "gravest threat." To be sure, Rostov was recaptured by the Red army on November 30, but it was possible for the Nazis to picture that development to the Japanese as merely a strategic withdrawal made necessary in order to throw sufficient men and supplies into the Moscow front. And as late as December 2 the German communique talked optimistically of having "penetrated deeply" into the defenses of Moscow.

Pearl Harbor occurred five days later. It was not until December 10, however, that Hitler admitted that the Germans were withdrawing from Moscow. He could afford to do so then, for by that time Japan was irrevocably in the war.

Willkie, Farley, Hughes, Smith Rumored As Labor Arbiters

By Arthur F. Degreve
United Press Staff Writer

President Roosevelt was understood last night to have decided to ask Charles Evans Hughes, Wendell L. Willkie and James A. Farley to serve with other public leaders on a body of "super-arbiters" under the newly created National War Labor Board.

The name of Alfred E. Smith, former Governor of New York, also was reported to be under consideration.

White House Secretary Stephen T. Early disclosed that the board of "umpires" was being formed and that Willkie's name was on the list of likely appointees. Willkie subsequently conferred with Mr. Roosevelt but it was said his possible appointment was not the primary objective of the meeting.

Instead, it was associated by some with a new crop of rumors that Willkie soon will be named to a major administrative post in the Government's drive to obtain maximum arms production. He repeatedly has insisted that responsibility for all-out production be centered in one man instead of being divided among many Federal agencies.

The proposed "umpire" plan is said to call for selection of 12 or more impartial men who would be on call in event the War Labor Board is unable to settle an industrial dispute.

The Labor Board will hold its first formal meeting January 16. It started work yesterday by mediating by proxy a long-standing dispute at Freeport, Ill.

It is understood the names of the available umpires would be submitted to union and management groups involved in conflict and they would choose an umpire who would hand down a final decision.

This step reportedly would be taken only after the board had exhausted all other methods of restoring peace.

The President is said to be taking extreme care in drafting the list of candidates. Officials pointed out that many of them probably will be required to make decision on such explosive questions as the closed shop which may have powerful influence on postwar relations between industry and labor.

1. THERE ARE NO TREES in this rubber "plantation." Made from a petroleum derivative, butadiene, shown in tanks above, is the basic ingredient of synthetic rubber.

Rubber Industry Anticipated Need For Synthesis

With a 400-million-dollar Federal allocation at its disposal, the rubber industry in the United States has been started on its greatest expansion program since the discovery of vulcanizing—a move to provide synthetic rubber in the face of rapidly dwindling imports of natural rubber from the Far East.

Expectations place the United States output of synthetic rubber at 400,000 tons annually when a vast plant construction program is completed a year from July. Upon this the Nation will rely for more than half of its rubber needs. But for the time being, there is little hope for the motorist. The gradually increasing output of synthetic rubber will be restricted for use in defense items.

For 15 years men like Dr. Waldo L. Semon, ace rubber research chemist of the B. F. Goodrich Co., has been anticipating the day when America would look to synthetic rubber to keep its defense wheels rolling. With painstaking steps they have raised the status of the synthetic product from a test-tube novelty to a point where it is ready for mass production.

Synthetic rubber is made from petroleum. This means America can produce as much as there is money to finance the construction of processing plants. As for performance, hundreds of trucks now use synthetic tires and are getting wear and dependability comparable to natural rubber.

Latest hopes for synthetic rubber, outside of tires, are further developing of new defense weapons. Already United States bombers and pursuits planes are equipped with bullet-sealing gas tanks and feed lines, made possible with a synthetic rubber resistant to gasoline and acids.

Pacific Stronghold 'Down Under;' Dutch Surrender Tarakan Island

Australia (1), with its huge land mass suitable for plane bases, is looked upon as a last-ditch stronghold should the Japanese continue their successes in the Pacific. Tarakan (2), oil island off the coast of Borneo, was surrendered by the Dutch fighting against overwhelming odds. Dutch bombers, however, struck back at the Nipponese invasion fleet. Singapore (3) was heavily hit by Jap bombers and its defenders "dug in" on a battle line only 150 miles north of the straits. The British spoke cryptically of a possible change which would aid the situation in Malaya. The coupling of air bases in Burma (4) with those that could be established in Australia was looked upon as a possibility

The war in the Pacific throws into sharp relief the strategic importance of Australia's naval and air base, Port Darwin (see map above), which stands at one of the northernmost points of the Australian continent.

In the sparsely inhabited northern territory, Port Darwin occupies a position of reserve behind the great Netherlands bases of Surabaya, in Java, and Amboina, on Amboina Island, in the Moluccas group.

While supply routes connecting Port Darwin with industrial Australia are not the best, the continent represents a vast resource of food and arms supplies for Port Darwin.

Long recognized as an important commercial airport, Port Darwin is only 3½ hours flying time from Surabaya. Air lines between Darwin and Singapore run northwest across the Netherlands East Indies and would be menaced if a hostile power secured possession of these islands.

Port Darwin is really an outpost. It is separated from industrial Australia by hundreds of miles of desert spaces. Supplies reaching the base from Southern Australia must travel 3000 miles by land or sea. The port has no direct rail connection with the industrial southland.

Until a few years ago, Port Darwin was a hamlet of minor importance, its isolation and extreme tropical climate acting as a deterrent to any development. In 1938 it started to respond to the growth of aviation development, and assumed some importance as the first Australian port reached by planes from Singapore.

The outbreak of war in 1939 brought swift expansion, and today Port Darwin has all the aspects of a boom community. It has swollen from a rural population of a few hundreds to more than 5000 within a few years. Australian infantrymen were brought there in 1939, and located in improvised quarters which were supplanted by modern cantonments later. Artillery, engineers and air forces followed and in April, 1941, the garrison was strengthened by a big movement of troops from the southeast.

Originally serviced only by a civil airport, Darwin now has a new military airdrome. The entire port has been modernized along up-to-date military lines. American-made bombers are used for patrol work in the Darwin area, extending along the northern Australian coast from Cape York, Queensland, on the east to Wyndham, Western Australia, on the west, and from the Pacific to the Indian Ocean.

Infantrymen stationed at Darwin are charged with the task of protecting the port from surprise attack by land, which is not impossible since the coast for long distances on either side is completely uninhabited.

4. WHEN the "curds" are skimmed from the vat, they are solidified into square blocks that cut like cheese

5 AFTER BEING WASHED the synthetic product is rolled into heavy blankets of unvulcanized rubber. Process is completed when it is vulcanized rubber

Swimming Advised for 'War' Nerves

Dancer Thinks It Best Means Of Keeping Fit

By Genevieve Reynolds

IF SOFT living has given you flabby muscles, or if the tense wartime tempo of living has made your nerves taut, hunt up the nearest swimming pool and dive in. That's the advice of Irina Baronova, premier ballerina of the Ballet Theater, appearing tonight and tomorrow at Constitution Hall.

After stretching and practicing six hours a day, you'd think this comely ballerina would be ready for a quiet bridge game. But not Irina. She heads for the most accessible swimming pool, summer and winter.

"Swimming," said Miss Baronova, "not only takes the kinks out of taut nerves and renews enthusiasm and vigor, but normalizes the figure. It's the best all-around exercise for any woman—desk worker or housewife. For it teaches body control and perfects bodily coordination."

Leisurely Pursuit

While the exercises for ballet are excellent for developing leg and arm muscles, the ballerina terms them too strenuous for the average woman. But swimming, she explained, may be done leisurely or vigorously.

She herself has been swimming and dancing since she was five years old. However, she thinks any normal woman can learn to swim at any age. Next to swimming, she advocates tennis for the all-round body builder.

"Too many women bog down in complicated exercise regimes and never stick long enough to produce results," said the Russian-born dancer, "for they seem too much like work. Exercisees should be fun as well as work. An outdoor sport is most effective for it gives more pleasure than the gymnastic variety and one does not quit too easily."

Exercise Daily

Since exercise is second nature to her, the dancer seemed surprised that any woman could go a day without some form of it. Confronted with the fact that many don't, she exclaimed: "Why, that's the only way to keep fit! I'd hate to think of how I'd look if I stopped exercising for a month. It's doubly important that a woman look her best as well as feel well now. Otherwise, it's impossible to stand up under long working hours or discouraging war news."

Poor posture and awkward movements are the average woman's despoilers of beauty. Slouching through the middle takes away all the dash and style of a costume, believes Miss Baronova. To develop grace, she suggests dancing to music. Also, she recommends that the daily calesthenics be put to music.

As for make-up, "the least possible is the most effective," said Miss Baronova. "By that I mean, you should strive always for a natural effect. Leave the exotic and heavy make-up for the stage. That's the only place it belongs. "A light lipstick and a little powder plus eye make-up artfully applied are all the cosmetics needed for street or daytime wear. In the evening change the light lipstick to a darker shade."

Mary Haworth's Mail

Three Years Ago, College Graduate Bore Child Out Of Wedlock, and Two Days Later Renounced Claim To Infant; Is Husband-to-Be Entitled to Know?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am writing to ask your advice on a very serious matter. I have never discussed this problem with anyone else and have no intention of doing so in future. I am a woman 27 years old, not bad looking, and have a college degree. I have been employed in Washington (although not with the Government) for the past three years.

At the time I left my home town to come here, I was expecting a child,—a fact known only to me. The child was born here and two days later was placed in a home. The father, who never suspected his paternity, was killed last winter in an accident. The very few friends I made in my first year's residence here have all drifted away,—a development I encouraged by changing my job and place of residence.

Now I am very much in love with a most attractive man, who wants to marry me. I wish to know if I should tell him about this chapter in my past. Or should I keep it a secret? I know I could not reclaim my child after all this time—as I have never seen her since the day I gave her up. I am afraid this man might renounce me if I tell him the truth—and I do want a home and children I can cherish before the world. I am prepared to follow your advice, which I trust you will be able to give me soon. Sincerely,

I. H. J.

Problem More Complex Than Woman Realizes

DEAR I. H. J.: It seems to me the responsibility properly rests with you alone to decide whether you would be justified in marrying this man while withholding the full truth of your record from him. If you have the qualities of temperament that would allow you to cut completely with the past, putting your unfortunate first-born out of your life—out of your thoughts and plans and emotional concerns—as finally as though she had never been brought forth by you, no doubt the marriage built on that tragic cornerstone of hidden data would seem to justify itself as well as most.

What your husband never knew about your unorthodox behavior could never trouble him, and you might find in companionship with him, and in the absorbing task of bearing and rearing his children, emotional and social compensations so substantial as to permanently insulate your heart and conscience against haunting reminders of the child you had unnaturally repudiated in frightened self-defense.

And yet there is always the possibility—which must be considered in foresighted reckoning—that your post-marital child-bearing and child-rearing experiences might, either recurrently or with mounting consistency, rend the veil of the past before your inner eye to such an extent that you would eventually succumb to an anguished psychological compulsion to attempt, at least, to re-establish some type of relationship with your first-born. And under the pressure of such compulsion, you might consider it either morally or socially imperative to confront your husband with the whole truth, at last.

In view of the circumstances preceding and surrounding the infant's advent, it is understandable how you could have impulsively gone through the motions of irrevocably dismissing her from your life. Seen in such short retrospect, the whole experience of her begetting could have temporarily divested her of any semblance of intrinsic relatedness to your personality and destiny—so that you felt no qualms in "putting her away." But that rebellious psychological reaction, obtaining at that crisis and carrying over until now, might be completely reversed if you were to bear more children under socially approved auspices, in materially secure circumstances.

As you savored the experience of lovingly tending legitimate babies and watched their personalities miraculously unfold, it seems to me not unlikely that the specter of your disavowed first-born's unknown personality and possible lack of loving care would wistfully beseech or ironically mock you—from behind the eyes of the little ones who matter-of-factly called you "mother." In other words, there is some probability that the experience of conscientiously discharging a mother's obligations might fully arouse your currently comatose "maternal instincts," with the results aforementioned.

It is in the light of such considerations as these, therefore, that you must decide whether it seems worthwhile to marry the man without telling him the truth about your past. And while I am of the opinion that, in general, it is neither sound policy nor ethically essential to confess one's moral transgressions to another human being, I nevertheless believe that a good marriage cannot be built on false pretenses of a major kind, inspired by one partner's guilty fear of the other's supposedly limited understanding or uncompromising moral austerity. Which raises the question—from yet another angle—of how much of the truth should be told before you marry this man or any man.

I am obliged to conclude that you must rely wholly upon your own intuitional guidance in framing a personally acceptable, socially feasible decision in this matter. Reasonable minds would concur in wishing for you the opportunity to lead a normally "fulfilled" life henceforth—but I am not sure such opportunity can be securely established on a basis of implicit deceit, that might leave you and your marriage greatly vulnerable to insidious inner corrosion.

However, your own deliberate reflection may lead you to the warranted conclusion that you are psychologically "tough" enough never to suffer remorse at stealthily and permanently disowning your fatherless child. And you may see fit, on the basis of that conclusion, to proceed with marriage while keeping your secret intact. If such is your eventual decision, I should not challenge its feasibility—for you.

Because it well may be that you belong to the phlegmatic, unimaginative classification of human beings, who live involuntarily on the surface of things, and for whom "appearances"—in the here and now—are the only reality. And in that case, it is readily conceivable that you could—in any crisis—elect a personally expedient course of action and steer sturdily ahead, harvesting profit of a kind, untouched by misgivings concerning the moral implications and subtle social repercussions of your choice. I offer this comment in no disparaging sense, but only for what it may be worth, in helping you to understand yourself and clarify your purpose.

Children In Wartime

This is one of a series of answers to parents' questions by the Child Study Association of America in its booklet, "Children in Wartime."

False Courage

MY BOY of ten seems almost angrily indifferent to the war. He is impatient with our conversations and constant listening to news reports. Apparently all the instructions given him at school irritate him. He insists there is no danger and that people who think there is are just silly. How can I make him more aware of the seriousness of what is going on?

DON'T be fooled. Whistling to keep up your courage is a well-known device. Maybe for this particular boy it is a necessary kind of refuge—each must find his own way. Probably behind all this belligerent indifference there is more anxiety than appears. Don't try to force a more realistic attitude upon him. He probably knows as well as you do what is going on. Maybe some day you'll find a chance to help him admit to more anxiety than he now shows. His discovery that it isn't "sissy" to admit his fears will be a healthy one.

Children manage their fears by different means, and react to danger in a variety of unpredictable ways. Don't be surprised at anything. The child who seems altogether indifferent may be the one who will show his concealed anxiety in ways that are apparently unrelated. This is true of children, not only in wartime, but in any situation in which they can't admit their real feelings.

Our experience with young children teaches us that they find ways of masking their feelings. For example, the unacknowledged jealousy of an older child toward a new baby may show itself in recurrence of bed-wetting, thumb-sucking, disobedience and other misbehavior even while he apparently "loves" the baby. Similarly the child with whom war-anxiety is largely unconscious and who shows only indifference may now take to bullying the younger child—to demanding extra attention from his parents, or to expressing his hidden fears, in many other indirect ways. Such misbehavior, while it lasts, will call for patience and understanding from both father and mother. In time, these children are likely to get their second wind and quiet down.

Home Interiors Show Personalit Of Individuals

A worthy cause and a committee meeting was the occasion for seeing one of the pleasantest homes we've ever been in. Of course, it belonged to an unusual woman so we should have been prepared for its distinction. It wasn't a new house—it wasn't slick or crisp but such personality! The architecture was rural English with natural hand-cut beams and a raftered ceiling reaching up into the roof.

Book-lined walls and floors covered with Oriental scatter rugs established the key of the room. A wood burning fireplace and old furniture, family photographs, a Paisley shawl, some old portraits and keepsakes gave character to the design. But the real lift came with the brilliant orange theatrical gauze curtains—they were very sunny and bright with the dark woodwork, the glowing colors in the rugs, the tawny rusts and dull greens in the upholstery.

The dining room adjoining had old mahogany furniture against ivory walls, an Oriental rug, green curtains—then an orange table cloth and napkins for the buffet, antique silver and interesting china were grace notes.

This was the home of a couple with four grown sons, all brilliant and personable—altogether a family that we'd call a proud achievement. The house just looked like four sons somehow, the only catch to the whole picture was the challenge it offered to the future wives of those young men . . . it will take a lot to satisfy them! For this house was more than a congenial assortment of "things"—it reflected the wide interests, the poise, the culture of the parents, and its most significant furnishings were the illusive qualities that you couldn't see or define.

'A Mrs. Doe—'

"I've met the most interesting woman——"

"Who is she?"

"A Mrs. Doe—I think that was the name—anyway, she's a most unusual person——"

"Doe? . . . Doe? . . . What's her first name?"

"I really don't know. . . . It was at the Burlaps' party. We had the most wonderful talk. I really never met a woman more intelligent, more stimulating——"

"Well, of course, there are two families of Does here . . . the Chauncey Does and the John Does."

"And this woman had such a wonderful sense of humor."

"Well, if she was at the Burlaps' party, it must have been Mrs. Chauncey Doe."

"And another thing about her, she was so gracious—what I mean is that she was so thoughtful and considerate in little things—and to little people. You know, that's so rare in women——"

"Well, of course, the Chauncey Does have a very nice background. He's head of Anchovy Paste, Inc."

"What made this Mrs. Doe so rare was that in talking she made you feel as if you were so bright . . . and so witty . . . and were having all sorts of wonderful ideas yourself. You know that's so unusual——"

"Oh, well, Mrs. Chauncey Doe is very lovely. She was a Twitter — you know, the Twitter Housecoat people."

"Well, this woman was so easy to talk to, I felt as if I'd known her always."

"If it's Mrs. Chauncey Doe, it's a very good contact."

"You could just tell she had an unusual sense of values—oh, it's all so hard to explain, but what I mean is, I felt as if I were talking to someone who saw everything beneath the surface, who really understood what it was all about, who . . . who, well, who was AWARE," . . . if you know what I mean . . ."

"Oh, yes. Well, if it's Mrs. Chauncey Doe, you'll probably see her again. She's active on a great many boards."

"Oh, I intend to see her again. You only run onto a person like that once in a lifetime. I have her card somewhere . . . Oh, here it is . . . It says Mrs. Donald Doe!"

"Donald Doe! Why, I never heard of the family in my life!"

Another Steal From the Men

Hollywood, Calif.—Just as it seemed women had lifted everything that could be borrowed from the masculine wardrobe and adapted it to their own uses, another man's item goes sissy. Now it's the shirt stud—which men could never find anyway.

Alexis Smith is wearing a subdued plaid wool frock—which Milo Anderson calls "a cocktail plaid"—with its blousy top fastened by a row of jet studs. She believes the removable studs will be just the thing this spring in washable dresses.

Fairfax Virginia Smathers Capture Attention of Washington Society

Her name is Fairfax Virginia, after the Southern town in which her parents were married in February, 1938. . . . She's the 14-day-old daughter of Senator and Mrs. William H. Smathers; and she had her first glimpse of Washington yesterday when her mother arrived from Atlantic City, N. J., and joined the Senator in their apartment at the Mayflower Hotel.

SENATOR SMATHERS

A New Year's Eve gift to her parents, little F. V. has a 17-month-old brother, James Foley, who seems more than willing to take a temporary back seat while the baby of the family basks in the spotlight. . . . Meanwhile, Mrs. Smathers has hardly had time to get her bags unpacked and her suite in order since she returned to the Capital. . . . For reports were no sooner circulated that Fairfax Virginia was no longer just a town, but had become a person, than friends began to call in droves to meet her. . . . Latest dispatches have it that she is rapidly becoming one of Washington's most popular young ladies. . . . Incidentally, Senator Smathers has three daughters and two sons by a previous marriage.

Several ladies of the press were enchanted yesterday when Paul V. McNutt, a guest at their club luncheon for Philippine Commissioner Elizalde, proudly produced a locket in which he has his favorite picture of Mrs. McNutt. . . . The revelation was entirely accidental. . . . In the midst of table talk before the program began he pulled out his watch. . . . Somebody spied the locket on the end of the chain, and its contents were displayed in short order. . . . When somebody passed the word down the table to Mrs. McNutt, dimples dented her cheeks as she flushed. "He's probably got my first tooth, too," she chuckled.

PAUL V. McNUTT

Mrs. William O. Douglas, also at the luncheon, was asked several times, in off-the-record whispers, of course, if there was any truth in the report that her husband was to become defense production director. . . . "Not, at least, until someone asks him," she replied. "To date, nobody's said a word to him about it."

At the same luncheon, I happened to be sitting by a former resident of Manila, who was lavish in her praise of Mrs. Francis Bowes Sayre's activities as wife of the United States High Commissioner. . . . Seems one of her outstanding feats was to get the Philippine women interested in the Red Cross. . . . American wives of officers and members of the High Commissioner's staff had long carried on such work, but the natives had carefully held aloof from it. . . . Mrs. Sayre, however, changed the picture almost overnight. She called a meeting of leading ladies in Manila; made no bones about what she hoped they would help her do. . . . A week later regular Red Cross sections were full speed ahead twice a week at the Commissioner's residence. They continued until shortly before Manila fell.

Washington friends of Mrs. Sayre have received no recent word as to where she is now but rumors have floated this way that both she and Mrs. Douglas MacArthur and the latter's baby were sent to Australia by bomber a few days after the first Japanese attack on the Philippines.

* * * *

For years, friends—and publishers—have been urging Wade H. Ellis to collect his latest bits of verse into a book. . . . "Nothing doing," says Mr. Ellis each time I press him for a publication date. . . . But he continues to turn out verse in general and limericks in particular with amazing skill and regularity. . . . At Mrs. George Barnett's tea a few days ago he quoted his latest limerick about a Yale graduate to Louis Owsley, who happens to be a Yale man himself. The poem runs as follows:

WADE H. ELLIS

A learn-ed alumnus of Yale
Was telling a wonderful tale;
The point was so bright
That we roared with delight . . .
But it never could go through the mail.

Mr. Owsley seemed to think the man might just as well have been from Harvard. But it's all a matter of meter—when you're writing a limerick . . . and Harvard has two syllables.

Mrs. Casey Is Hostess At Legation

Entertaining at the Australian Legation, Mrs. Richard G. Casey, wife of the Australian Minister, was hostess yesterday afternoon at a party for wives of Australians and New Zealanders here. They made plans for "Anzac Week," which will be from February 9 through February 21.

Among those at the party yesterday were Lady Baillieu, wife of Sir Clive Baillieu, who is director of the British Purchasing Commission. Lady Baillieu is an Australian, and other guests included wives of the members of the staff and a few additional friends. They are Mrs. Alan S. Watt, wife of the First Secretary; Mrs. D. H. Harries, wife of the Naval Attache; Mrs. G. H. Munro, Attache of the legation, and Mrs. Wilson Ewart, whose husband is with the legation.

Still others attending were Mrs. Pete Van Valzah, Mrs. Ewart McCarthy, Mrs. R. W. Marshall, Mrs. R. M. Firth, Miss J. R. McKenzie, Miss Pat Jarrett and Mrs. Elizabeth Squire, secretary of the Australian Legation.

Patsy Kelsey Widely Feted

In a hectic rush of preparation for her flight to the West Coast this week, where she will go with her mother, Mrs. Victor V. Kelsey, for her marriage to Lieut. Blackburn Brewer, U. S. M. C., in La Jolla, Calif., the end of this month, Miss Patsy Ruth Kelsey is in the midst of a round of prenuptial parties.

Last night Miss Betty Ann Swagart entertained at a shower in her parents' home on Davenport Street, and a number of her friends are planning parties to be fitted in somehow before her departure the end of the week. With her plans for the wedding still unsettled—Miss Kelsey does not yet know whether the date will be January 31 or February 7—the bride-elect is hoping to be married in Bishop's Church in the little California seaside resort. She has spent three summers in La Jolla and will be joined there by her father, who will give her in marriage.

Among those at Miss Swagart's party last night was Miss Gloria Goode, who, with her hostess of yesterday evening, will leave for a sojourn in Florida for several weeks. They will visit Miss Ann Swanson at Fort Lauderdale, Fla., and then spend some time at Winter Park, visiting Miss Goode's friends at Rollins College, which she attended last year.

Others at the party were Miss Carol Cromelin, Miss Mary Jane Moran, Mrs. Newton Brewer, Miss Mollie Stonestreet, Mrs. Walter Gallagher, Miss Letitia Ord, Miss Jean Roundtree, Mrs. Keith Buckells, Mrs. Maitland McDonald, Mrs. Carl Corby, Mrs. L. J. Goode and Mrs. V. V. Kelsey.

He was recently elected to membership by the Michigan chapter of Tau Beta Pi, honorary engineering fraternity.

MISS SALLY ANN VANDECAR

Mr. and Mrs. Claire W. Vandecar, of Grand Rapids, Mich., announce forthcoming marriage of their daughter, Sally Ann Vandecar to William Worthington Russell 3rd.

The prospective bridegroom is the son of the former United States Minister to Thailand and Mrs. William Worthington Russell, of this city.

Plans are being made for the wedding to take place on Saturday in the Klise Memorial Chapel, Grand Rapids, at 3 o'clock. The bride will have as her only attendant, her sister, Miss Rosalynne Vandecar. Robert R. Rodenberg, of Washington and Jay White, of La Peer, Mich., will serve as ushers, and the Rev. Charles W. Hesley will officiate.

Miss Vom Rath To Be Married On Saturday

Leaving last night, Sherley Ewing is in Long Island where his wedding to Miss Marie I. vom Rath will take place on Saturday at the Cedar Creek Club, Locust Valley, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

The bride-elect is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. vom Rath, of Glen Cove, Long Island. Mr. Ewing, who has been making his home in this city for the past few years, is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. George W. Ewing, of Baltimore. He was graduated from Yale in 1934.

Miss vom Rath is the granddaughter of the late Col. and Mrs. Henry May, of Washington and Baltimore. As Miss Cecilia May, Mrs. vom Rath was a famous belle in Washington in her girlhood. The bride-elect was presented to society with her twin sister, Cecilia, at a dinner dance, June 29, 1935, given by her parents at the Woman's National Golf and Tennis Club. She was educated in Lausanne, Switzerland, and at Arundel, England.

Although for the past few seasons the vom Rath twins have made their home in New York they previously spent much time in the Capital where they entertained widely and in turn were often feted. During their debut year a host of parties were given in their honor including fetes given by the former United States Minister to Norway, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, a luncheon given by Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean, and a gala dinner dance given by their aunt, Mrs. Harry Black, of New York.

Admiral Hart's Wife Is Visiting The Starks Here

Mrs. Hart, who will leave Washington tomorrow morning, is staying at her home in Sharon, Conn. Word has just been received that her husband, who is commander of the United States Asiatic fleet and supreme naval commander for the United Nations in the southwest Pacific, has arrived in the Dutch East Indies by submarine.

The Minister and Mme. Hurban have taken a box for the opening performance of the Ballet Theater tonight and will have Mr. Masaryk as their guest at Constitution Hall. All members of the Czecho-Slovak colony in Washington are particularly interested in this program because the opening ballet, "Slavonika" is designed to the music of some of the famous "Slavonic Dances" written by the well known Czech composer, Anton Dvorak.

On Friday evening Minister Hurbuan will entertain at a stag dinner in honor of Jan Masaryk. That afternoon the visitor will be honored at a tea given by the Newspaper Women's Club.

Toscanini Won't Wait, Even for First Lady

By Elizabeth Henney

Cries of "Take your seats!" rang through the corridors outside the auditorium of Constitution Hall last evening, and as the audience poured through the doorways toward their places, a murmur ran through the throng: "It's time to start and the First Lady has been delayed. Toscanini is so punctual. Will he begin the program or will he wait." The answer came with the first thundering strains of the National Anthem. He didn't wait.

It was the third program of the season of the Philadelphia Orchestra, with Arturo Toscanini as guest conductor, presenting a selection of works of Hadyn, Mendelssohn, Bach-Respighi, Debussy and Strauss; to as attentive and brilliant an audience as the Capital has ever seen. An air of excitement filled the hall from the moment people began to arrive, and the Washington mid-winter audience that usually coughs and sneezes its way through a program, must have nearly strangled from the effort of adhering to the "pin-drop" silence they maintained during the entire program.

Mrs. Roosevelt, who arrived shortly after the start of the first number on the program, had with her as guests her cousin, Monroe Robinson, who arrived in Washington yesterday morning, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Adamic and Miss Malvina Thompson.

Mrs. Roosevelt Speaks For Red Cross War Fund

Just before the end of the intermission Mrs. Roosevelt, accompanied to the platform by two Red Cross aides, spoke on behalf of the Red Cross' new war-fund drive.

This drive, as she explained, differs from the regular one in that it is to help our own people. Since its recent start, $100,000 already has been raised, but since the goal is $750,000 there is still a lot to be done. As she closed she added, "Thank you, and I hope that the giving and the knowledge of what it will mean to the people will make all the givers happy."

Diplomatic, official and residential society turned out full force to fill the great auditorium to capacity for the event. Chief Justice and Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Caspar Miller, who entertained for dinner for them beforehand.

Meyers Fete Toscaninis At Midnight Supper Party

Next to the Presidential box, Miss Mabel Boardman occupied her usual box, and with her as guests were her sister, Mrs. Frederic Keep, Mrs. Dwight Davis and Mrs. Bruce Smith. On the opposite side of the hall Vice President and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace occupied their box with their son, Robert, and the Swiss Minister and Mme. Bruggmann, brother-in-law and sister of the Vice President. Next to them, Mrs. Toscanini entertained a party in her box, which included Mrs. Vladimar Horowitz, the Toscaninis' daughter; Miss Marguerite De Vecchi and Mrs. Eugene Meyer.

A few boxes away, Mr. Meyer was host in their box to the Librarian of Congress, Archibald MacLeish, and Mrs. MacLeish; the Assistant Secretary of War for Air, Robert Lovett, and Mrs. Lovett, and Col. Edward Steichen.

After the concert, Mr. and Mrs. Meyer entertained at midnight supper at their home in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Toscanini for a small company of close friends.

With the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Morgenthau were the Minister of the Netherlands and Mme. Loudon and Mr. and Mrs. Dean Acheson, and Mr. and Mrs. George Garrett had with them Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins and Miss Elaine Darlington. The Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Adolf Berle were hosts to Ben Cohen, and Miss Alice Clapp had as guests Dr. and Mrs. Hans Kindler and Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Byrnes.

Many Notables In Audience

Ralph Foster, Capt. Charles Lambe and Miss Craig McGeachy, the governor of the Reserve Board Marriner Eccles with Col. and Mrs. M. Robert Guggenheim and Mr. and Mrs. Morris Cafritz, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, Mrs. William R. World YWCA Studies Reconstruction Role

A study of ways and means in which women can help in postwar reconstruction and in the building of an enduring peace was accelerated by the executive committee of the World's Young Women's Christian Association yesterday in closing sessions of its four-day meeting.

A preliminary report on the international study, "Christian Basis for a New Society," was made at the meeting. Members of the Y. W. C. A. on every continent are taking part in the interchange of ideas by correspondence on the subject, it was announced. Their contributions will provide the basis for study material which can be used by the national Y. W. C. A. movements in the various countries.

Preparation of leadership for work in post-war reconstruction was another problem discussed at the sessions at the Dodge Hotel. "The experience of the world's Y. W. C. A. after the last war, the fact that it has members in all the nations now suffering devastation, and the fact that it is in touch with leading professional and volunteer workers in all these countries provide the organization with valuable resources to assist in this work," officials pointed out.

Presiding officers at the executive committee sessions were Miss Ruth Rouse, of London, president of the World's Y. W. C. A.; Miss Julia Matouskova, of Czecho-Slovakia, and Mrs. Harrie R. Chamberlin, of Toledo, vice presidents.

Plans were discussed for the next meeting of the World's Y. W. C. A. Council in Vancouver, Canada, in the fall of 1942.

Girls' Leader Discusses Roles For Defense

The adolescent girl should be fitted into the civilian defense program by the planning of activities and responsibilities suited to her age and development, Miss Virginia W. Lewis, consulting psychologist on the National Girl Reserves staff in New York City, told a meeting of the Girl Reserves and Mothers' Council at the Y. W. C. A. yesterday afternoon.

Miss Lewis recently completed a national survey on the effect of the war and defense preparations on the adolescent girl.

She deplored the fact that, in some cities, girls of high school age are being asked to do air-raid warden duty at night, and to serve as hostesses and entertainers for service men who are much older. She said that she discovered this type of situation often enough for it to be cause for concern.

Miss Lewis named as duties suitable for adolescent girls: helping in the care of children under the direction of trained personnel in already established agencies; farm production and gardening; salvange of paper, metals and other materials; first aid training and cooperation; conservation and preparation of food; knitting and sewing for already existing organizations.

In her study of the situation, Miss Lewis made a trip through the Southeast, to Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia and Tennessee and thence to Michigan.

The Y. W. C. A. here is making plans for activities for the high school girls in its Girl Reserve organization, in coordination with the local civilian defense program. A panel discussion on the Girl Reserve plans, with Miss Lewis participating, was conducted last night by local leaders after a dinner at the Y. W. C. A.

Two committees have been formed in connection with the Girl Reserve defense program. Mrs. Clara Bennett heads the adult committee, which includes Miss Emilie White and Mrs. Albert Jenkins. On the girls' committee are Emma Lou Heine, Murial Speidell, Vesta Furniss, Phyllis McDonald and Betty Hardy.

Press Women Hear Filipino Commissioner

Although the Filipinos look forward to independence, they cannot forget what their relationship to the United States has meant in social progress and prosperity, Joaquin Elizalde, Philippine Resident Commissioner, told the Women's National Press Club yesterday.

Asked what chance of success a Japanese propaganda campaign of "Asia for Asiatics" would have in China, Mr. Elizalde said such a movement might be "dangerous" if intelligently handled, but not when handled in a "sloppy way."

Pointing out the poverty of many people in China, he said "propaganda with a little hot soup would go a long way."

Speaking at the club's luncheon at the Willard Hotel, the commissioner said, "I can't see how anybody in Japan can ever think they're going to win the war against the United States."

He praised the "wonderful work" which the Red Cross is doing in the Philippines, and mentioned its work among the hordes of war refugees.

Among the many problems facing the Philippines, he cited the "difficult position" of the lepers now, and the complications of getting food to them.

Paul V. McNutt, administrator of the Federal Security Agency and former High Commissioner of the Philippines, with Mrs. McNutt was among the guests at the speaker's table. Miss Maria Osmena, daughter of the vice president of the Philippines, also was introduced. Mrs. Esther Van Wagoner Tufty, president of the club, presided.

P.-T. A. Congress Favors 7-Man Recreation Board

The board of managers of the District Congress of Parents and Teachers yesterday approved the bill which would set up a seven-man recreation board for the District.

However the group disapproved the bill's second amendment, after S. J. McCathran, the P.-T. A. legislative chairman, said that it would limit what the Board of Education can do in giving permission for use of school buildings.

Mrs. Alan Sharp was named chairman for the District Parent-Teacher convention, and the dates were set for May 19 and 20. The board meeting yesterday was held at P.-T. A headquarters in the National Education Association building.

Mrs. Leo Raywid was appointed summer round-up chairman for activities in connection with children entering school next fall.

Mrs. Roderick C. Moss was elected assistant treasurer for the District P.-T. A.

Mrs. Lucian Jordan, vice president in charge of health work, outlined plans of the emergency nutrition committee. It will issue leaflets asking mothers of school children to send in ideas which they have found successful in bettering their families' food habits.

OCD Aide Talks at Center

The continued great need for volunteer workers was stressed by Mrs. Harry S. Bernton, chairman of the Civilian Defense Volunteer Office, yesterday in an address to the Washington section, National Council of Jewish Women, at the Jewish Community Center.

The Council of Social Agencies is now seeking 50 women interested in work with children of nursery age, to be trained as children aides. This will require "earnest and capable women" who are able to give time on three days a week to complete a training course of 75 hours, she said.

There is still need in the various defense offices for office workers, especially typists. Housing authorities need volunteers to help with the task of inspecting rooms and houses for the army of newcomers to the city. Maintaining civilian morale in a bustling and overcrowded city like Washington is one of the real problems of civilian defense authorities, she said. Settlement houses and other social service agencies are working overtime on this problem and can use a great deal of volunteer help. There have been calls recently for dancing instructors, gym teachers and entertainers. One agency is looking for a woman to teach a class in household decoration, to help those who may need assistance in establishing decent and attractive homes in the crowded conditions which prevail here.

"The Volunteer Office," said Mrs. Bernton, "serves three types of agencies; private community service agencies, public community service agencies, and the Defense Council. It discovers opportunities for volunteers, refers volunteers to proper courses for training, registers volunteers and places them in the places where they are most needed."

Japan's Resources Limited, Club Told

Japan's limited resources will not enable her to wage a long war, Edward E. Reardon, trial examiner in the Federal Trade Commission and former United States vice consul at Kobe, Japan, told the Park View Woman's Club last night.

He spoke on the work of the commission and on his stay in Japan at the meeting at the home of Mrs. Thomas E. Griffith.

Assisting hostesses were Mrs. E. P. Folliard, Mrs. R. S. Drissel, Mrs. L. Standish, Mrs. Rose F. Andrews and Mrs. W. O. Hancock.

Mrs. W. O. Gale, president, was in charge of the meeting.

Hope Auxilairy to Meet

The City of Hope Auxiliary of Los Angeles Sanatorium will meet at 1:30 this afternoon at the Jewish Community Center, when Mrs. Willard E. Herring will speak on the work of the American Red Cross and the necessity for its war fund. Newcomers to the city are invited to the meeting, it was announced by Mrs. Benjamin H. Brill, president.

HIDDEN HUNGER

Hidden Hunger is not caused by lack of food, but by improper diet. To combat this stealthy form of malnutrition, nutritionists advise foods that are rich in vitamins and minerals. In most diets, they recommend pure, fresh MILK.

NATURE designed MILK as the most nearly perfect food. (See table below.) And we've improved upon Nature by making Sealtest Homogenized Vitamin "D" Milk an even more perfect food.

To its naturally rich store of vitamins, we add 400 units of Vitamin "D" to every quart. That's especially valuable for children.

And it's homogenized! The cream remains distributed all through the milk. This gives each glassful an equal share of precious vitamins, minerals and proteins . . . and tends to make it more readily digestible.

Penny for penny, milk gives more nutrition than any other food you buy. Safeguard your family against HIDDEN HUNGER with vitamin-rich, mineral-rich foods and with this finer Sealtest Homogenized Vitamin "D" Milk. (A pint a day for adults; a quart for children.)

Jap Relations Unchanged, Lozovsky Says

By the Associated Press.

Kuibyshev, Jan. 13.—S. A. Lozovsky, Russian spokesman and vice commissar of foreign affairs, declared today that Soviet-Japanese relations were unchanged, still being based on the neutrality pact of last April.

His press conference, first since war broke out in the Pacific, was attended by both Japanese and correspondents of the Allied nations.

He added that negotiations were under way for renewal of the Far Eastern fisheries pact with Japan which expired December 31 but they had not been concluded.

Of the war against Germany, he expressed optimism and said:

Germany now is trying to get new forces from Hungary, Italy and Rumania, but it is more difficult since Germany has been weakened. The Red army's blows at the Reichswehr are reflected not only in occupied countries but also in those hitherto untouched by war.

"The situation in Finland is worse than in any other 'ally' of Germany."

He said he had heard of clashes between Finnish soldiers and civilians on one hand and German troops on the other, and remarked, "such a situation cannot last much longer."

Lozovsky said the Germans and Finns in the northern sectors had thought that when the polar night set in the Red Army activity would cease, "but they miscalculated; our counterattacks there are continuing."

Sneering at Hitler's appointment of himself as head of the German army, Lozovsky said the Russian answer had been the taking of Kaluga.

"We know the enemy is strong, however," Lozovsky conceded. "The wounded beast is dangerous before it dies, but we shall continue our blows until we clear the land of all Hitler murderers and assassins."

Senate Committee Kills Bill to Unify U. S. Air Power

By the United Press.

Legislation to create an independent American air force, akin to Britain's R. A. F. and Germany's Luftwaffe, was killed yesterday by the Senate Military Affairs Committee.

The action came when the group indefinitely postponed hearings on a measure by Senator Pat McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, to unify American air strength—now divided between the Army and Navy—under an independent command.

The committee said the fact that the Nation was at war made it inadvisable to "bring up this controversial question."

"The present unified command making our army a harmonious whole is, in the judgment of the committee, what the completely unified people of our country are entitled to in the successful conduct of the war," it said.

Sidelights of the War

Battle-Scarred Yankee Hero Of Free France Returns Home

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 13.—A Yankee hero of the fighting Free French army, Lieut. Jack Hasey, the only American holding a commission under Gen. De Gaulle, returned home today, tired, wounded, glad to be home, but eager to fight again either for Free France or for his own United States.

The 25-year-old Bridgewater, Mass., soldier was met by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hasey, as he arrived by airplane from Miami, wearing the blue uniform of the Free French and green and black ribbon of the first order of liberation—the highest decoration for bravery awarded by Gen. de Gaulle.

At Damascus, on June 21, he said, his right jaw and his larynx were shattered by machine-gun bullets. As a result, his voice comes now through a steel tube inserted in his neck, just underneath his chin.

In March, 1940, while he headed an ambulance unit on the Finnish front near Lake Ladoga bomb splinters shattered his right forearm.

Then, while he was crossing the African desert enroute to America to have his facial injuries treated by plastic surgeons in Boston, his plane was forced down and he and his companions narrowly escaped injury.

As to those ribbons for valor which adorned his uniform, Hasey had nothing to say.

Japs Decree Death

Tokyo, Jan. 13 (By Official Japanese Wireless) (INS).—The death penalty will be applied to all persons, irrespective of nationality, who resort to acts of rebellion or acts detrimental to the security of Japanese armed forces in the Philippines, Japanese military headquarters in Manila proclaimed tonight. Offenses of minor character will be punished with heavy prison sentences.

Lincoln Loses Fence

London, Jan. 13 (AP).—Abraham Lincoln's statue in Parliament Square has been stripped of its protecting iron fence to boost Britain's scrap iron supply.

It was announced today, however, that special guards would be assigned to watch over the statue to prevent possible vandalism.

Roosevelt Greets Petain

Vichy, Jan. 13 (AP).—United States Ambassador Leahy called today on Marshal Petain to present to the chief of state personal best wishes from President Roosevelt for the prosperity of France during the New Year.

Free Albanians Vow Allegiance to Allies

The Free Albania Organization, headed by Constantine A. Chekrezi, former Albanian commissioner to the United States, pledged its "unreserved adherence" yesterday to the 26-nation anti-Axis pact signed January 2.

The pledge, to prosecute war against the Axis until it is defeated and subscribe to the principles of the Atlantic Charter, was sent to Secretary of State Hull.

Senate Group May Approve U. S. Job For Christenberry

A Senate Judiciary Subcommittee is scheduled to draft a report today that, it is believed, will recommend confirmation of Herbert W. Christenberry, member of the Louisiana political faction formerly ruled by the late Heuy P. Long, to be United States District Attorney at New Orleans.

Subcommittee members, it was said, view as serious some of the charges made against Christenberry by the Louisiana Association for Clean Government, but take the position that representatives of the organization failed to prove any of them in two days of hearings.

Senator McFarland (Democrat), of Arizona, is chairman of the subcommittee. Senators O'Mahoney (Democrat) of Wyoming, and Austin (Republican), of Vermont, are the other members.

Cuba Bans Tire Sales

Havana, Jan. 13 (AP).—The Cuban government today forbade sale or transfer of automobile tires pending a survey of the supply on hand.

Second Trial Now Possible For 'Sniper'

Disclosure that a Government witness testified falsely during the trial of John E. Eklund, convicted last year for the slaying of a 17-year-old Negro youth, yesterday raised the possibility of a second trial in District Court for the 26-year-old "sniper."

Legal machinery to seek the new trial has already been put in motion in the United States Court of Appeals by Defense Counsel Harry T. Whelan, as a result of a chain of developments stemming from a 4 to 12 year jail sentence given to Herbert Ray on Friday for housebreaking.

Ray was a principal witness against Eklund, when the former college student was convicted for the fatal shooting of Hylan McClaine, and asserted on the stand at that time that he had no criminal record and had never used any other name than Herbert Ray.

When Ray was arrested on the recent housebreaking charge, however, a check of fingerprint records revealed that he had served a term in the Federal penitentiary at Leavenworth for forgery and housebreaking in 1923 under the name of Luther Ray.

Confronted with these records last week, Ray still claimed to be innocent of any police record, but finally admitted to being Luther Ray under grilling by the United States attorney's office. He was confronted by his estranged wife, a Virginia waitress, during the questioning.

Informed of these developments, Attorney Whelan is now preparing a motion asking the United States Court of Appeals to send the case back to District Court so that a new trial may be asked from that tribunal.

He has already asked the Court of Appeals to postpone for 30 days any decision on action now pending there in Eklund's behalf, in order to give him time to file the new motion. Whelan also praised the action of Prosecutors John W. Fihelly and Charles B. Murray in bringing the new development to his attention.

Ray testified at the trial, after he had told prosecutors and the Court that he had never been arrested, that he had purchased bullets for Eklund, had carried on transactions for the purchase of a gun for him, and had been present when Eklund secreted a gun in some shrubbery near the old Washington Airport.

However, the fact that he has a criminal record, and testified falsely concerning it, is alleged to severely damage his credibility as a witness.

Eklund was originally slated for electrocution this Friday, but had the date set ahead until March 20 in order to allow the appelate court to rule on the motions already before it. These ask a new trial on grounds that police used a dictaphone to hear conversations between Eklund and his attorney, also charging that the jury was improperly permitted to hear evidence about other crimes which he was alleged to have committed.

Plan Drafted to Help Auto Dealers

cially equipped for commercial use.

5. Agreement that ceiling prices for autos shall be approximately at levels in effect before the freezing order to guarantee the dealer a fair return for handling.

Ban Extended to February 2

The OPM, meanwhile, announced extension to February 2 of the ban on sales of new passenger cars, light, medium and heavy trucks and truck trailers to allow more time for working out and putting into effect the rationing system. The original "freeze" order expires tomorrow.

Details of rationing probably will be completed "within a few days," OPM said.

"In order fully to acquaint the public and administrative officials with these details, approximately two weeks will be required before the plan can be put into effect," the announcement stated.

400,000 Cars Frozen

Cargile declared that the "relief" program has "nothing to do" with production beyond January 31, but concerned only cars now frozen at retail agencies plus those to be purchased the balance of the month. Manufacturers have been authorized to produce 204,000 autos during January to enable them to utilize materials already processed. An estimated 400,000 cars are "frozen" on dealers' floors.

Only that phase of the rationing program that has been definitely settled upon is to be made public today by Price Administrator Leon Henderson. Other phases of the program are to be disclosed later as soon as they have been determined.

Henderson is scheduled to open a second hearing of the committee at 10 a. m. today. He is to be followed to the witness chair by Floyd Odlum, OPM contracts distribution director.

Cargile Outlines Program

Cargile outlined for the committee an eight-point relief program. Five of the points are covered in the tentative agreement with defense officials. He also suggested that the Government pay for the cost of financing, insurance and storage on all cars and trucks carried by dealers after January 1, and urged Government purchase of stocks on hand after July 1.

Representative Patman (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the committee which the House created to investigate the effect of war production on small businesses, asked Cargile to recommend ways in which the Government could assist auto salesmen thrown out of work by rationing.

"That is a part of our long-range program," Cargile replied.

Nearly 500 dealers from all over the country and about 100 members of Congress filled the House Office Building caucus room for the hearing.

Stanley Horner, Washington dealer, told the committee that automobile display rooms are not, for the most part, subject to conversion to other uses without almost prohibitive expense and loss of revenue to owners. As an illustration, he told of one showroom now renting for $1010 a month whose owner recently was offered a $280 monthly rental.

Toscanini Scores Personal Triumph in Dull Program

Arturo Toscanini conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra on Tuesday night in Constitution Hall. Program: Symphony No. 99 in E flat major (Haydn), Excerpts from Incidental Music for Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" (Mendelssohn), Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor (Bach-Respighi), "Iberia" (Debussy), "Tod und Verklaerung" (Strauss).

Constitution Hall was crowded with an adulative audience last evening when Arturo Toscanini conducted the Philadelphia Orchestra in its third local concert of the season. The snowy-haired maestro was hailed tumultuously at his entrance, applauded with vigor and at length after each composition, and was accorded prolonged ovations at the intermission and the end of the concert. While it was the kind of demonstration to which he has long been accustomed, the veteran leader, whose seventy-fifth birthday is a little more than two months away, was plainly affected by the cordiality and the zeal of his welcome. As is his wont, he was prompt in insisting that the musicians in his temporary charge rise to share the honors.

BROWN

With a superb orchestral instrument at his command, Toscanini did not use it for the introduction of any novelties, the exposition of a spiritually impressive masterwork or the performance of a single American work. The resources of the orchestra were handled with a musicianship of the keenest sensitivity for form and color, and with an authority that brooks no deviation from his ideals. But the program was frankly a disappointment with its array of familiar music by Bach, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Debussy and Richard Strauss. One was delighted by the manner of presentation but unexcited by the matter.

Toscanini began with a beautifully balanced reading of Haydn's E flat major symphony from the set of six composed for the second visit to London. The treatment of the phrasing was clarity itself, the rhythms had indefatigable vivacity, and the genial humor of the music was fully exploited, as was the serious eloquence of the slow movement.

The virtuosity of the orchestra was the primary interest in the overture, nocturne and scherzo from Mendelssohn's incidental music for "A Midsummer Night's Dream," which was followed by Ottorino Respighi's "orchestral interpretation" of Bach's great passacaglia and fugue in C minor. The lightness and grace of the playing in the Mendelssohn pieces was contrasted with the richness of tone lavished upon the Bach.

There was lovely coloring in the impressionistic tone-painting of Debussy's "Iberia," which was displayed with a mastery of both detail and mass. After this picturesque interlude, the concert closed with the half-tortured, half-exultant "Death and Enlightenment" of Richard Strauss.

One ventures to say that it was Toscanini and not the orchestra that filled the hall. Apart from the regular subscribers, who would have been faithfully in their places, the assemblage had come to see a master of his art, regardless of the music put before them. If proof is needed, it lies in the fact that the house was sold out before the program was announced.

Traffic Procedure Irks Citizens Unit

A resolution protesting the "excessive" collateral being asked for minor traffic offenses was adopted last night by members of the Logan-Thomas Circle Citizens Association meeting in the home of their president, Mrs. Frank M. Thompson, 1120 Rhode Island Avenue Northwest.

K. C. Robbins, an auxiliary policeman and a member of the organization gave a short talk outlining the civilian defense program.

25 Officers and 414 Men Garrisoned Wake Island

The Navy announced last night that there were approximately 25 officers and 414 men stationed on Wake Island, according to the latest information available. Earlier the Navy had announced that the garrison there totaled 385.

At the same time, the department stated that President Roosevelt's citation of the Marine detachment on Wake marked the first time that so large a fighting unit had been so honored by an American President. Previously only individuals or small groups have been officially cited.

Animal League Gives Tips on Care of Pets in Raids

All owners of pets or domestic animals should become informed about care and protection of them during possible air raids, the Washington Animal Rescue League declared yesterday.

These are some of the rules provided by the league:

1. Mild cases of fear in dogs and cats may be controlled to some extent by giving them sodium bromide.
2. Identification tags with owners' names and addresses should be put on cats and dogs immediately, even if dogs already are wearing collars.
3. Have leashes handy and lead animals to safety when fire starts.
4. Remember that an injured animal may be frenzied with pain. When attempting to handle them, protect hands with heavy leather gloves or wrap animal in blanket or coat so it cannot bite.
5. If the animal gets burned, act promptly. Do not delay to clip the hair.
6. An animal suffering from shock should be kept quiet and warmly wrapped up. Small quantities of brandy and whisky will help "if the animal will take them." In addition water or milk would be offered frequently.
7. Anybody with a horse used on the streets should attach a neck rope or halter 6 to 8 feet long and have horse wear it whenever on the street. Use rope to tie animal up securely during raids.
8. Horses can be tied to wagons, which should be provided with chains so that front and rear wheels may be locked together.

ARTISTS GET MAD TOO!

After the happenings at Pearl Harbor, every artist with any pretense at decency got as angry as any other normal American citizen. With the temper was born a great sense of futility with regard to the nature of the work in which we, as artists, are engaged. Pretty girl pictures now leave us cold.

We are not "easel" painters. We make illustrations which have to be instructive and practical.

We are certain that our ability to instruct Mrs. Kowalik in the use of an ironer is just as applicable to her son or her husband in the service or "war" work of any kind.

There are thousands of people who can't read blueprints but understand pictures.

Is there anybody here with enough imagination to see the potentialities of an organization of forty people (Americans) who are artists and photographers and trained to do this kind of work?

We don't intend to take this test lying down. We want to do our part—and right now.

Tax dollars must be rationed, too!

This is no time to WASTE DOLLARS. We are at WAR!

SURE, we'll give up tires. We'll give up automobiles—and luxuries—and non-essentials—EVEN sons—and brothers—and fathers—and husbands—and lives!

America will give up any and everything necessary to win this war.

America will make all sacrifices needed for final victory.

BUT LET'S BE CONSISTENT. At a time when we're rationing vital needs—spending must be rationed, too. We want to see every unessential, unnecessary governmental expense cut to the very bone. "Government as usual" has no more place in this critical picture than the rejected philosophy of "business as usual."

Just as we must conserve and ration every pound, even every ounce of materials essential to military needs, so must every tax dollar be rationed to finance a long, hard war. This means not only sacrifice for the individual, but unmistakably a temporary curtailment of government agencies not vital in war time.

We want Congress to ration the Tax Dollar, too

We've got to spend to win. But we've got to save to spend. The President points the way in his budget message. A joint Congressional Committee reports the Government can save 1½ billion dollars by eliminating non-essential expenditures from the federal budget.

And that's only a beginning! Think what this vast sum will buy in planes, ships, tanks, guns, ammunition—an amount equal to more than half the total of Defense Bonds and Stamps already purchased by the public!

This is no time for America to pussyfoot around! There is no place now for dollar wasting. Uncle Sam can't afford any "fifth wheels" this year. We are at war!

So we say to the government—let's strip for action. Let's cut out every expense that is not vital. Let's spend to win—and save to spend. Let's make the dollar fight, too! And let's keep uppermost in mind that every tax dollar we convert from non-essential expenditure right now is a dollar toward VICTORY—and a quicker victory.

This may prove to be the greatest challenge in America's history.

If you agree with the point of view expressed here, raise your voice. Let Congress know where you stand on this important issue. Write your Senators and Representatives today. Say to them—"We are at war. Stop non-essential spending." Let's make this demand ring out from the housetops of America.

And if you want to help spread this message in other towns and cities, the Citizens Emergency Committee will greatly appreciate any contribution you care to make. Funds are needed. Just fill in the coupon here.

What YOU can do to help

The most popular word in America today is action. Only deeds count now.

No doubt for some time you've had a point of view on doubtful governmental expenditure, on tax dollars spent for unessentials. And the chances are good that you did nothing about it.

But now you must do something about it. Now is the time for you to add your support to this vital cause of putting every available tax dollar to work to help win this war.

Here are two specific things you can do—and do today:

1. Write your Congressmen. Say: "STOP NON-ESSENTIAL SPENDING."

2. Help spread this message throughout America. Your contribution will aid in paying for advertisements like this in towns and cities all over the United States. Anything you care to give will be extremely helpful. Just use the coupon here.

'Stenos' Snatched Before Being Trained

That new Government school for stenographers can't get started. The Office of Production Management snatches the pupils and puts them to work before they finish their courses. OPM is that hard up for stenographers. The school, located in the Lincoln Building, opened Monday. Forty pupils reported but by noon they were torn from their studies and put to work at OPM. The same thing happened yesterday to 30 new stenographers. Between 30 to 40 stenographers will report today but it's anyone's guess how long they will be trained.

The school is operated by the Civil Service Commission to train stenographers for OPM. The commission supplies the equipment and the faculty and OPM pays the trainees. Within a short time the commission expects to train stenographers for other war agencies. To be eligible for training, a stenographer must first pass a Civil Service test and be certified to OPM which makes the training assignments.

Supreme Court Justice James Byrnes is reported to be drafting an executive order for the President on the creation of an alien property custodian. He's said to have been given the task of settling the row between Treasury and Justice on the administration of alien property. A compromise will be worked out whereby Treasury's Division of Foreign Funds Control will share the job with Justice's Leo T. Crowley.

The White House is trying to get OPM to hire Nathan Straus as a housing consultant. Straus' resignation as head of USHA was accepted yesterday by the President . . . The office of the Philippine government here has had to discharge six of its girls because of the lack of funds . . . The rumor at Wage and Hour is that the agency will go to New York City within 45 days. Space is reported to have been leased in a building at Forty-eighth and Broadway.

Sheridan in New Post

Ted Sheridan, executive assistant to the SECommissioners, has gone to OPM as assistant to Lessing Rosenwald . . . Social Security Board's Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance has found space in Baltimore, where it will move its 1800 employes instead of to Philadelphia. The Baltimore deal will be closed when the controversy is settled on who will pay for renovating the building . . . SEC is signed up for the Penn Athletic Club in Philadelphia and it will get the building despite the fight of Penn A. C. members to retain all or a part of the building. SEC employes are hoping the swimming pool and bowling alley will be kept open after they move in.

OPA's Consumer's Division is being junked. The publications division has been turned over to Robert Horton, OEM information chief, and the economic division is being made a unit of OPA's Research Division. John Castle will head the unit. The only problem now is what to do with the division's field staff . . . John J. McDonough, director of WPA's region one, has been brought here and made assistant director in charge of training and reemployment.

Incidentally, WPA is being gradually changed from a work relief agency to an all-out war agency. It's doing more and more war work . . . Reconcile these qualifications for employment at OPA:

(1.) Appointments must be in accordance with Civil Service rules; (2.) No political test or qualification shall be given consideration, and (3.) All employes paid $4000 or more must be confirmed by the Senate. The first two requirements were written into the price-control bill by the House but the Senate added the third . . . If you want to be transferred to Richmond with the Patent Office, to Philadelphia with Immigration and Naturalization Service, or to St. Louis with REA, get in touch immediately with Archie Edwards at the Civil Service Commission . . . Joe Short, USHA personnel director, will be appointed executive officer of OPA's executive office.

The inside word is that the President won't budge on his decentralization order which will send a dozen agencies out of the city. Congressional opposition has stopped a second order from being issued, but the delay is only temporary . . . another order will be issued within two weeks . . . Civil Service exams: junior professional assistant, 20 options; student aid, 5 options; departmental guard, $1200; special investigator, Metropolitan Police, $3600, and home economist, $2600 to $5600.

Architects Act to Save City's Plan

Wars Leave Permanent Scars On Washington, League Head Says

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, Jan. 13.—A campaign to preserve the city plan of Washington as much as possible during the period of expansion brought on by the war has been launched by a group of the Nation's leading architects, it was disclosed today at a luncheon at the Architectual League.

Meetings have been held and protests against the locations of recent construction projects in Washington have been made. A large model of Washington and maps and charts showing the changes in the city since the first plan was drawn up in 1791 have been installed at the league's headquarters. This material, exhibited in New York for the first time, will be open to the public throughout this month.

Wars Leave Scars on D. C.

Frederick J. Woodbridge, president of the league, said that every war has left its scar on the Washington city plan in the form of temporary buildings which, as a rule, become permanent buildings.

The architects were unanimous in condemning the location of the new War Department building now under construction in Arlington, Va., a short distance from Arlington Cemetery. After protests by the Commission of Fine Arts and intervention by President Roosevelt the proposed site of the vast building right next to Arlington Cemetery was changed to a point some distance away, but the architects contend that it still offers all sorts of problems.

Ralph T. Walker, New York architect, who resigned the presidency of the Municipal Art Society because of defense work upon which he is engaged at Trinidad, pointed out that the new War Department building will create a terrific traffic problem.

Obligation to Preserve Plan

Lorimer Wilson Rich, designer of the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington, said that the architects were incensed by the location of the War Department building. He said because Washington is the outstanding example of city planning in this country there is a traditional feeling among architects that it belongs to them and that they have an obligation to preserve it.

Last Thursday members of the Fine Arts Commission and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, which is charged with the continuance of the city plan, were guests at a luncheon of the league in observance of the 150th anniversary of Washington's first city plan, drawn up by Maj. Pierre l'Enfant, who was on Gen. Washington's staff during the Revolution. He was designated by Gen. Washington to draw up a plan for "the Federal City," as Gen. Washington called it.

Expansion Reduces Recreation Facilities

The Government building expansion in Washington has been making inroads upon recreation facilities for the workers in departments, Miss Sibyl Baker, director of the Community Center, said yesterday.

She spoke before a panel of recreation leaders meeting in the Jewish Community Center, Sixteenth and Q Streets Northwest. The discussion, second of a series of round table discussion, was held by the Community Center and Playground Department in cooperation with the Council of Social Agencies and the civilian defense recreation services.

"We are disturbed by the great number of facilities which have been withdrawn," Miss Baker said. During the last two months, she asserted, many tennis courts, softball and football fields have been taken over as building sites and for other defense purposes.

Other speakers on the program were Mark A. McCloskey, director of recreation, Miss Helen Rowe, regional recreation representative, both of the Federal Security Agency, Mrs. Mary Macfarland, employe activities officer, Office of Emergency Management, the Rev. Edwin H. Tuller, pastor, Calvary Baptist Church, and Dr. E. B. Henderson, director of health for the public schools.

The figures, presented by Miss Gertrude H. Bowling, director, showed that 156,674 visits had been made by the staff operating from two divisions in the headquarters office and by the five branches.

Police Open New Drive On Accidents

Analysis Shows Most Fatal Crashes Occur Near 6 P. M. Fridays, Saturdays

By Howard F. Wentworth
Post Staff Writer

Basing plans on an analysis of last year's fatal traffic accidents, the police accident prevention unit last night announced beginning of a new attack on the causes of death-dealing crashes.

For the first time, said Inspector Arthur E. Miller, police traffic supervisor, authorities have at their fingertips comprehensive data with which to set up an efficient accident-control program.

"And we intend," Miller added, "to devote the coming months to use of this new information as a means of holding 1942 highway mishaps to a minimum."

At the same time yesterday, Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer reported plans for "staggering" the work hours in private establishments as a measure to further relieve peak-time congestion.

Survey Under Way

Van Duzer revealed that a survey of private industry here already is under way with the Board of Trade and Junior Board of Commerce cooperating. Some 70 canvassers are at work, he declared.

Records compiled last year by Miller's accident prevention squad showed that of the 95 persons killed, the majority were attempting to cross streets "not at crosswalks."

In addition to urging citizens to observe crosswalk rules this year, Miller said his men would concentrate on new efforts to enforce safe street-crossing practices.

A total of 28 persons were struck down and fatally injured during 1941 while crossing between intersections, Miller's report disclosed. He said an additional six could be added to this list—they were killed while stepping from between parked automobiles.

In the driver class, APU records showed, violations of speed regulations contributed to the most deaths—28. Failure to yield rights of way were responsible for 11 fatal accidents last year, Miller said.

Special Instructions

He warned motorists that during the months to come, all traffic policemen will be under special instructions to "pay particular attention" to these two types of infractions.

Most fatal accidents last year—31—occurred in clear, daylight weather on a straight roadway between intersections. Passenger vehicles were involved in the greatest number of death crashes, with trucks second.

The First Precinct bore the brunt of fatal mishaps. Of the total accident deaths, 18 per cent occurred in this precinct. The Second Precinct was next with 12 per cent and the Third with 10 per cent.

Friday and Saturday proved to be the most dangerous days with 18 fatalities each during the year. The most hazardous time of the day was 6 p. m.

Proposals to "stagger" the hours of private workers, Van Duzer reported last night, will be submitted to the Commissioners as soon as studies of the current survey are completed—possibly within a "week or two."

Mrs. McLean May Purchase Mt. Hope As Her New Home

Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean is negotiating for the purchase of historic Mount Hope, in Georgetown, as her new home, it was learned last night.

The society leader recently sold her huge Friendship estate, Wisconsin Avenue and Newark Street, to the Federal Government for conversion into a defense housing development.

Mount Hope, 150-year-old landmark bounded by Wisconsin Avenue, Thirty-fourth and R Streets and Reservoir Road, is owned by Alexander Kirk, American Minister to Cairo, who purchased the estate in 1926. Although he made many renovations to the mansion and improvements on the grounds, his foreign service assignments kept him away most of the time.

Several years ago an attempt was made to have the estate rezoned so that an apartment development could be built there, but the move was successfully opposed by the socially prominent residents of the neighborhood.

Youth, 20, Dies Of Bullet Wound

William Victor Chaney, 20, of 1159 Third Street Northeast, died of a bullet wound to the left chest last night. He was found unconscious on his bed, a 32-caliber automatic at his side, by his father, Thomas V. Chaney.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald said the youth had apparently shot himself while cleaning the gun, and issued a verdict of accidental death.

Rev. F. L. Miller Observes Anniversary

Honoring of the Rev. Fred L. Miller's tenth anniversary as pastor will highlight the thirty-eighth annual meeting of the Mount Rainier (Md.) Christian Church. Thirty-third Street and Bunker Hill Road Northeast, tonight beginning with a dinner at 6:15.

T. Paul Speake, church deacon, will be toastmaster at the dinner. George Targett, official board chairman, will bring greetings from the congregation. A variety program and the meeting will follow the banquet.

Washington Defense

DOTTIE GIVES HER "PERSONAL BOND" TO AID DEFENSE—Dorothy Lamour, the screen's sarong girl, who has already spent one week of her vacation from film work to aid the sale of defense bonds, arrived in the Capital last night. She reported to H. L. Rust, jr. (left), chairman of the District Defense Savings Committee. Walter L. Fowler (right), budget officer of the District, was on hand to meet the star at Union Station. Dottie will aid the Nation's war effort for five more weeks.

Lack of Funds Checks Defense Migration Plan

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

The special House committee investigating defense migration focused its attention on the District of Columbia yesterday—and learned there are not many civilian defense and morale problems hereabouts that money could not help.

"Actually nothing has been appropriated for us, although we are expected to do a big job," Commissioner John Russell Young, coordinator of defense for Metropolitan Washington, told the committee.

"We are in the Lanham Act for about $2,400,000, although we asked for $6,000,000. When we get that it must go mostly to light and water pipes for places opened up by defense," he said, pointing out that while Washington has been permitted to borrow $1,000,000 from the Federal Government, "we don't have the money yet."

Dubious About Funds

Coordinator Young expressed doubt money would be obtained for fire fighting equipment which had been counted upon to build large portable tanks and provide other means of assuring a quick and sure supply of water during emergencies.

"We have difficulty explaining that we are not like other municipalities, that we cannot go ahead and originate our own methods of doing things," he said.

Chairman Tolan said he understood Washington's population was expected to increase 125,000 during the next year and that "what you are doing to meet the situation ought to be a lesson for the rest of the Nation."

Proud of Response

Commissioner Young assured the committee that District officials are "proud of our defense and of the way in which civilians are responding," but that everything has been done "without spending a cent."

Col. Lemuel Bolles, director of the District Defense Council, outlined the civilian defense organization for the committee. Asked what he thought about the feasibility of air-raid shelters for protection of the civilian population, he said: "I'm not highly impressed by them."

He also said, in reply to questions, that he did not believe in evacuating large blocks of people except when bombing attacks might be prolonged and destructive. "I believe in their staying there and taking care of themselves," he said.

Col. Bolles also declared that unless people could learn to take care of themselves all the air-raid wardens in the country would do little good.

"You cannot take a million people by the hands and give them individual care. Unless they are awake to this they will suffer greatly. If they are awake to it," he said, "even a poor plan will work. The superstructure is unimportant when a bomb hits."

Asks School Priorities

Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, told the committee he was endeavoring to get a "certificate of urgency" from the United States Office of Education in order to persuade OPM to give him priorities for the erection of much-needed school buildings. "We have the money for these, but no priorities," he said.

Engineers, clerks and custodians are leaving the schools to get better-paying jobs, Dr. Ballou said. Conrad Van Hyning, director of public welfare, said similarly that guards and maintenance staffs of welfare institutions are "leaving for more money."

"As for welfare workers themselves, we had an unprecedented 40 per cent turnover last year," he declared.

Van Hyning pointed out that the room shortage would affect the city's foster home program, since "naturally many people can now get more for their rooms then we can afford to pay them."

Dr. George C. Ruhland, health officer, said his request for funds had been drastically cut. He estimated a deficiency of 2100 hospital beds in the metropolitan area, and pointed out the city does not have personnel to use its venereal disease clinics to the fullest.

Outlining the housing situation in the crowded city were John Ihlder, executive officer, Alley Dwelling Authority; Mrs. Helen Duey Hoffman, secretary, Washington Housing Association, and Laurence Williams, chairman, subcommittee on housing, District Defense Council.

Police Sound Emergency Call For Volunteer Auxiliaries

Vounteers are wanted by the auxiliary police of the Metropolitan Police Department. While most precincts are fully organized, there is an urgent need for volunteers to serve in sections policed by Precincts 2, 4, 7, 10 and 11.

If you live in any one of these sections and have a clean record and a desire to be of service to your city during the present emergency, go to your nearest precinct and register. It is your duty to lend a hand for civilian defense and your city needs you.

This is an official bulletin issued by the office of the superintendent of police.

Cigarettes Serve As Admission Price

Two packages of cigarettes will be the admission price to a "Win the War" meeting held Friday at 8:30 p. m. in the National Press Club Auditorium.

Ruth McKenney, author, and Samuel Darcy, labor organizer, will speak. Two films will be shown—"Men and Ships" and "Power for Defense."

The cigarettes will go to the USO.

Dupont Circle Slashes Budget

The executive committee of the Dupont Circle Civilian Defense Area met yesterday in the Iron Gate Inn, 1734 N Street Northwest, and pared their proposed budget from $46,000 to approximately $22,250.

All items previously submitted to District authorities were studied by the committee headed by William Clark Taylor, chairman. It was decided rather than to attempt to supply each sector post with typewriters, a central typing pool might be set up. A year's supply of stamps for each of the 122 sector posts, which it had been estimated would cost $6100, was cut to $1000.

Nee Appointed To National Post

Maurice Nee, of the P. J. Nee Co., furniture retailers of this city, has been appointed a member of the Retail Home Furnishings Industry Defense Savings Committee, it was announced in Chicago by Louis S. Bing, jr., president of the National Retail Furniture Association.

Connecticut Ave. Group Seeks Funds

A resolution "insisting" that Congress appropriate funds adequate for the needs of civilian defense here was adopted last night by the Connecticut Avenue Association meeting in the Mayflower Hotel.

The members authorized the treasurer to apply immediately for a loan of $100 against dues to be collected which will be used for more pressing civilian defense matters in the area. Leroy Thayer presided.

Funds for Armory, Home for Aged, Are Included In Deficiency Request

A District deficiency appropriation request for $451,381 is before Congress today after President Roosevelt made a request for the amount in a list of 1942 estimates late yesterday.

An appropriation of $110,000 for completion of the new District armory near Nineteenth and B Streets Southeast was among the chief items requested.

Included in the estimates were $75,320 to carry an expected deficit at the Home for the Aged and Infirm at Blue Plains in both salaries and building repairs, $75,000 for new school buildings equipment, $36,000 for completing the new Children's Receiving Home.

Also in the request was an item of $34,360 for new radio equipment and uniforms for guards covering the District water supply system.

Other items were:

For purchase of the site of an elevated water tank near Alabama and Massachusetts Avenue Southeast, $5000; for salaries and other expenses of the local civilian defense organization, $10,000, and $2500 for completion of repairs to the Francis Junior High School.

Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee yesterday introduced a bill making persons convicted of stealing tires and other automobile accessories in the District liable to a ten-year penitentiary sentence.

Stealing of tires, tubes, gasoline, antifreeze fluid and skid chains would become a felony under terms of the bill. At present theft of such articles is a petit larcency and punishable by a maximum sentence of one year in jail or a fine of $200, or both.

Union Head Denies 40 Bricklayers Were Discharged

Harry C. Bates, president of the A. F. of L. Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers International Union, said yesterday it was "entirely untrue" that 40 bricklayers had been discharged from a Chesterfield County, Va., Army construction project for "soldiering" on the job.

A recent dispatch from Richmond said officials of two construction firms had stated the men had been discharged for that reason.

Bates said that as soon as he read the story he asked the War Department to investigate. He then received this reply from James P. Mitchell, chief of the labor relations branch of the Army Office of Engineers:

"An investigation by this office discloses that this article appeared . . . without first being confirmed by the officer in charge of construction and that 40 bricklayers were not discharged but resigned of their own accord.

"The freezing temperature for the last few days forced the contractor to lay off some of the bricklayers during certain hours of the day. Because of their inability to earn a full day's pay, 40 of these men left to seek jobs elsewhere."

Hogan Bests Thomson by 1 Stroke in Golf Playoff

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

DEMPSEY VS. LOUIS BY MAIL

I am a liar. So says Mr. Hickey McIntosh, of 409 Oakdale Place Northwest, with ungentle stroke of his pen which drips anger at our suggestion that Jack Dempsey would have beaten Joe Louis if they had been prize ring contemporaries. And somewhere in this paragraph we seem to have tied the nonstop record for subjunctives.

POVICH

Anyway, our correspondent warms up to the short and ugly word by addressing us as "Dear Mr. Povich, I am afraid your vision of a fight between Joe Louis and Jack Dempsey, in your column of January 12, is so blocked with white supremacy that it is sickening."

We had an idea we'd hear about that January 12 piece. In fact, it was with some trepidation that we opened the morning mail, and we weren't disappointed. By mail we were accused of (1) being a dope, (2) a no-account, (3) a lousy fight expert and (4, 5 and 6) prejudice. However, Mr. McIntosh incorporates most of the charges in his lone reply, and we pass it on:

"You said that Dempsey proved the point of being the best fighter by climbing back into the ring after Firpo knocked him out. You omitted the fact that Dempsey was helped back into the ring by newspapermen. You forget that Louis went back into the ring under his own steam when Buddy Baer knocked him over the ropes in Washington.

Dempsey's Dodging of Wills Cited

"The reason I can't class Jack Dempsey with Joe Louis," he adds, "is that Louis has never dodged any man. Didn't Jack Dempsey dodge Harry Wills and the draft? . . . I plainly see the depths of your reasoning power, and that summary of yours on January 12 is a good example of it. I have noticed several of your pieces trying to lessen the greatness of Joe Louis. (Ed. Note—objection noted.)

"I can truthfully say that Harry Wills grew to be an old man trying to entice Dempsey into the ring with him," says page two. "Dempsey refused to fight colored men after he was given a scare by Lester Johnson soon after he came to New York. (Ed. Note—Lester Johnson broke two of Dempsey's ribs before losing a 10-round decision to Dempsey in 1916.)

"But I am happy to know that your saying a crouch would baffle Louis has proved you are a liar," hints our correspondent. "Louis has proved that, by beating crouchers, crawlers, runners and fainters, both black and white." (Ed. Note—Nice going.)

"So, in order not to appear foolish, don't try to poison others' minds with your cheap typing and, for future reference, why don't you admit with all the facts before you that Joe Louis is the greatest fighter—fairness of hitting, cleanliness of fighting, deportment in and out of the ring—the world has ever known, regardless of race or color, and I doubt whether you have the nerve to print this."

That last crack wins us one argument unless something happens between here and the presses. In fact, times being what they are and pieces for the paper tough to compound, we embrace the challenge no less eagerly than we'd accept the rent money. Thanks, Mr. McIntosh, for dropping an easy day's work in our lap.

No Intent to Underrate Louis

But somewhere along the track, the issue has been confused by our correspondent. We won't even debate the truth that Dempsey ducked Harry Wills, the draft, or drew the color line. We weren't even intending to underrate Joe Louis, or to detract from his rightful niche among champions. What we were saying was, that if Dempsey and Louis were tossed into the same ring, Dempsey would come out the winner. And if we remember rightly, it wasn't a positive statement. It was qualified by that handy word, "probably."

It wasn't any attempt to elevate Dempsey above Louis in any other respect even as a fighter. Bluntly, we don't give a damn who could beat whom. For certain their contrasting military records leaves Dempsey somewhat stigmatized. There can be no complaint with Louis' behavior in or out of the ring, and we seem to recall that our visionary account of a Louis-Dempsey fight provided for the possibility that Dempsey would foul Louis, with no suggestion that Louis would be guilty of foul fighting. That may be construed as prejudice, perhaps, but certainly not against Louis.

However, without regard for the patriotism, character or other than fighting attributes of Dempsey and Louis, we were attempting to boil the question down to a hypotetical appearance of Dempsey and Louis, each at their best, in the same ring. Somehow, and despite our indignant correspondents, we seem still able to visualize it as a knock-out victory for Dempsey, always in the knowledge that these are words we'll never have to eat.

On the Line

CONSIDINE

New York, Jan. 13.—It is with pride that we turn this space over to Dr. Mal Stevens today. Dr. Stevens, of course, is the football coach of New York University. More than that, he is a nationally respected authority on bone disease, a first class gentleman and—P. S. a good guy. Dr. Stevens . . .

While our men and boys in blue and khaki are bravely defending our Nation, an army in white is waging war against another invader that menaces our homes. This army is an army of mercy. Its foe is disease.

In times like these, it is difficult to drive home the importance of the comparatively undramatic and unphysical fight against an invisible germ. The sight of a scientist holding up a test tube in a laboratory can never hold the excitement of the flaming picture of a man with a gun on an embattled rampart. With our soldiers and sailors writing epics of courageous accomplishment on land and in the air and on the sea, the story of the fight against disease in clinics and hospitals seems to pale into insignificance.

But this fight must go on. It cannot take time out for wars. It cannot be relented for a moment. Indeed, in times like these, it should be intensified. Our President has said: "One of the front lines of our national defense is the health of our boys and girls."

One of the most menacing, most dreadful and most mystifying of all diseases is infantile paralysis. Medical science knows nothing of its causes, little of its cures. It strikes quietly, quickly, cruelly, leaving a tragic trail of human wreckage in its wake. It must be licked.

Government funds and guns will support our soldiers and sailors; Private funds will have to finance the unceasing search by unselfish scientists for the whys and wherefores of this terrible disease. That's why, although war is straining our resources and our finances, we must continue to support the campaign of the committee for the celebration of the President's birthday. This is the sole fund-raising unit of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

As a member of both the medical and athletic worlds, I am proud of the part sports has played in previous birthday celebration campaigns. Many a life has been saved and many a shriveled limb has been salvaged by generous contributions from fans, athletes and promoters. But much more is needed.

26,000 Were Stricken by Malady

We have just come through the three worst years in the history of the risease. Since 1939, more than 26,000 of our youth—many of them athletes—have been stricken. You might not think it is such a terrifying toll when compared to other communicable diseases. True, the incidence of infantile paralysis is not as high as several other scourges. But the time and cost of rehabilitation have far-reaching social and economic consequences which make infantile paralysis a major public health problem.

Treatment does not end with recovery. After the ravages of the disease have been halted, there is the necessity of vocational training, of convalescent care, of possible placement in a new career, and the expense of providing orthopedic equipment such as braces, splints, casts, frames.

It is conservatively estimated that it costs $1000 per year to provide proper after-care for each victim. Multiply this by the 26,000 new cases and you have the tremendous total of 26 million dollars.

I do not need to add that this is a pretty frightening financial problem for the National Foundation for just this year alone.

The National Foundation combines and directs our resources in the infantile paralysis fight. It has over 2000 chapters in this country. One half of the money raised by the Birthday committee is left in the county in which it was contributed. There is buys orthopedic equipment, finances nurses' tranling, guides vocational education, helps pay hospital expenses of victims. During epidemics, members of the chapters aid doctors and public health officials.

The other half of the Birthday funds is used by the National Foundation for research, education and emergency work in epidemics. Since the organization in 1938 until September, 1941, the foundation spent nearly two million dollars. During the same period, more than two and a half millions were left with local chapters to adminster to local needs. And to the everlasting credit of sports, a good portion of that money was raised by athletic events.

As you can see, the fight against infantile paralysis is expensive. That's why sports cannot ease up now. War relief agencies are directing many appeals at your pocketbook these days. But, though we should not let these pleas go unanswered, we must not forget to "help the youngster around our own corner." We should not forget to "help the boy who keeps the score."

We in the sports world should consider the fight against infantile paralysis our fight. Sports develops grace and stamina and strength—This disease destroys those very things. Let's destroy the destroyer—for its strikes at the commodity which makes every great American sports event great, and that is health.

Vikings Win, 32-27, To Top School League

Coolidge Five Defeats Anacostia, 32-31, In Other Interhigh Basketball Game

Surpassing all the surprises that have gone before, Central High's basketers shocked even their most ardent admirers yesterday when they stopped an Eastern five which had won seven straight previous starts, 32-27. The upset, which gave the well-named Vikings top spot in interhigh standings, was half of a two-game schedule for the day, the other portion going to Coolidge by a 32-21 count over Anacostia.

Eastern Is Subdued

There could be no excuses for Eastern. It was simply played off its feet by an underdog Viking five that did the right things at the right times.

Most important of these was the nine-point rally staged late in the fourth to dig out of a four-point deficit and go ahead for good. By the end wasn't even a contest.

Though played at Eastern, the game and its outcome were highly pleasing to the majority of fans, for there were four Viking partisans to every host club rooter in the stands. Such was the certainty of Tide enthusiasts that the game was in the bag.

Look Great at Start

At the start of each of the first three quarters Eastern appeared the champion of 'em all. The ends were what hurt.

Four points in the first 30 seconds was the Tide's contribution to the opening period, but its foe tied it at 7-7 for the end. Six straight points to start the second period boosted Eastern's stock, but Central held a 16-15 edge at intermission. Finally, the Tide rammed home four points to open the third session, but then came the winners' decisive rally.

A few minutes after the start of the last quarter it was 25-20 favoring Central, and the issue was settled. Eastern cut that advantage to 25-24 and 28-26 in the waning minutes, but that was its best. In the last 3 minutes it missed approximately 12 shots in its desperate wildness.

There was little to choose between Central's Ted Thomaides, Johnny Gibbons, Hank Lawler and Bill Kelly in the matter of fight and defensive play. Thomaides got the most points, however, with 9. Gibbons and Lawler were close behind with 8 each.

Tops in the scoring column, despite the loss, was Eastern's George Pigott, who also led the floor game along with Larry Capone. Pigott amassed 10 points.

First Victory for Colts

The Colts of Coolidge survived one of the roughest encounters so far to take the first interhigh victory of their careers, but they clearly proved their superiority to a near-capacity gathering at the Coolidge gym.

A total of 37 foul shots was allowed during the battle, Coolidge sinking 8 out of 18 and Anacostia 11 out of 19. It was field goals, however, which made the difference. And the losers didn't get one of those until late in the third period.

Action got under way with the Colts taking a 3-4 lead after the first eight minutes. All the Indians' points were on tosses from the charity line.

Finally a Field Goal

At halftime the eventual winners led, 8-6, and Anacostia still hadn't registered 2 points at once. Finally, as the third session was about to end, Elmer Leukhardt slipped home a field goal to cut the Indians deficit going into the last period to 23-11. The last period proved Anacostia's best, what with four successful tosses from the floor.

Of the ten players who helped out in Coolidge's point making, Richie Waterman took honors. The stringy center had 10 points at the end, beating out Leukhardt for game honors by one basket.

That foul shooting was the favorite pastime during play was further born out by the fact that ten participants who couldn't score any other way managed for at least 1 point from the foul stripe.

Browns Must Raise Money For '42 Season

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Jan. 13.—President Donald L. Barnes of the Browns told a stockholders' meeting today the baseball club had no working capital for 1942 but was attempting to obtain additional cash loans from directors and banks.

He added there were no indications yet whether efforts to arrange the financing would be successful.

A reduction of $83,091 in net revenue from all games and deficits in minor league farm operations caused the Browns to suffer a substantial loss last season, Barnes said. It was reported the club went in the red about $100,000.

The Browns played before 661,882 persons last year—176,240 at home and 485,642 on the road—as compared with 816,752 in 1940, including 239,589 at home and 577,163 away.

Blames Runaway Race

Barnes attributed the drop in road attendance to the lack of interest after the middle of the season when the New York Yankees made a runaway of the pennant race.

A policy of rigid economy will be recommended to the directors, Barnes said, because of the war, the uncertainty of the future and the seven-game limit on night baseball.

Attendance at seven night games in 1941 was 45,413 as compared with 117,091 for 14 games the preceding year. The Browns already have released their scouting and publicity staffs.

The Barnes group showed itself firmly in control of the club, voting a total of 62,340 shares of the 100,000 shares of Browns' stock outstanding. There had been reports of dissatisfaction over the team's affairs among some of the leading stockholders.

Two directors, Howard V. Stephens and William H. Bixby, resigned because of the press of other business. Barnes and the remaining directors were reelected and Richard C. Muckerman was named to the board to fill a previous vacancy. Successors to Stephens and Bixby will be chosen by the directors at a later meeting.

Billy Soose Bows To Jim Bevans, Cleveland Boxer

By International News Service

Cleveland, Jan. 13.—In one of the best light heavyweight fights of his career, Jimmy Bevans, Cleveland Negro, tonight punched his way to a decisive victory over Billy Soose, of Farrell, Pa., former king of the middleweights.

Bevans carried the fight to the handsome Penn State collegian with a two-handed attack to win the first four rounds of the ten-round bout. Soose took the fifth by a shade, and Jimmy won the next two, opening a cut over Billy's left eye in the seventh. Soose took the eighth and tenth rounds, while Bivins won the ninth.

Damascus Defeats Poolesville, 34-16

Damascus (Md.) High cagers had no trouble whatever disposing of Poolesville's five yesterday, sweeping to a 34-16 margin behind the 22-point scoring effort of Bill Smith.

Bill Bennings

Whether he deserves it or not, Bill is taking a winter vacation. It is reported that Alan Clarke has loaned him the use of a paddock at his farm and that Bill has turned himself out to freshen up. During his absence Clocker Mike will wire selections daily. When Bennings returns to action, he will be on the racing scene at Hialeah Park.

Playoff for Golf Title Won by Benny Hogan

Hershey Pro's Birdie on Last Hole Defeats Jimmy Thomson by Single Stroke

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Jan. 13.—Stroking away with deadly coolness and accuracy, wee Ben Hogan chopped down Jimmy Thomson, the sturdy redwood of California, today and captured the play-off for the $10,000 Los Angeles Open Golf Championship in a links struggle that was not decided until the last hole.

Hogan, a mere stripling behind the broad shouldered blond from Del Monte, birdied the eighteenth with a spectacular performance and won the 18-hole struggle by one stroke.

Hogan had a 36-36—72 even par for Hillcrest Country Club, and Thomson, far from being a push-over for golf's mighty mite, had 38-35—73.

The little Hershey (Pa.) pro, via Forth Worth, Tex., found husky Jimmy no 2-to-1 underdog the wise money had made him, and came onto the last green deadlocked. Hogan approached the cup with a brilliant chip up the incline and the ball came to rest 2 feet from the cup. Thomson chipped up and left himself a 17-foot putt. He missed it by inches, and Hogan holed out.

Thomson Nervous at Start

The two ended the regulation 72-hole tournament yesterday tied at 282, and 4000 spectators swarmed the fairways for today's finish fight.

Thomson was nervous, as expected, at the start and lost the first hole with a bogie 5 when he overshot his approach.

Thomson regained his poise, how-

Private Louis Presents Check For $89,092.01

By the United Press

New York, Jan. 13.—Heavyweight Boxing Champion Joe Louis will be sworn into the United States Army as Buck Private Joseph Louis Barrow tomorrow—and he spent part of his last civilian day today presenting the Naval Relief Society with a check for $89,092.01.

The check represented the Navy's share of proceeds of a benefit bout Friday night when Louis defeated Challenger Buddy Baer.

The money was accepted by Rear Admiral Adolphus Andrews, the district commander and president of the New York Auxiliary of the relief society. He thanked the donors and said that the society had fixed a goal of $500,000 to be reached during 1942.

The $89,092.01 represents Louis' entire purse of $47,100.94; Baer's gift of $4081.11; preliminary boxers' gifts of $230, Jacobs' total profits of $37,229.96, and a $450 contribution from ushers.

G. U. Choice Over Colonial Court Team

For the simple reason that nothing in the George Washington basketball records for the season can match Georgetown's timely triumph over Temple on Monday night, the Colonials will be in an underdog role tomorrow night when they renew court relations with the Hoyas at Riverside Stadium at 8:45 p. m.

The two baskets in the last 45 seconds against Temple by the erratic Charley Schmidli and Bill Bornheimer, the ball-hounding G. U. center, pulled Coach Elmer Ripley's club out of its worst slump in three years and put the Hoyas on edge for the sixth modern renewal of the intracity series.

After renewing relations in 1939 for the first time since G. U. beat the Colonials in 1923, George Washington won the first two games but Georgetown bounced back and has won the last three and leads in the modern series, three games to two.

G. W.'s Reserves Better

George Washington holds a slight advantage in reserve strength with an abundance of sophomore material of about the same caliber while G. U. Coach Ripley is hard-pressed for subs after he puts Danny Gabbianelli into the game. G. U. has an edge in the starting clubs, however, in all positions but forwards. Matt Zunic gives G. W. better than an even break at forward, with Roy McNeil as a partner against Charley Schmidli and Ken Engles. Bill Bornheimer for G. U. commands an edge at center over Ed Gustafsom and Buddy O'Grady and Don Martin at guard give Georgetown superiority over Jim Myers and Bobby Gilham. Gilham is currently bucking a scoring jinx

Wilson Stays Unbeaten as Gonzaga Bows

There were several times when it tottered, but Woodrow Wilson High's undefeated basketball record finally remained intact yesterday on the strength of a 39-29 beating of Gonzaga at the Tiger gym.

It was the fifth straight triumph for the Tigers this year. And they were forced to put on the pressure to take it after a fast beginning. That start accounted for an 11-3 margin after one period, but it couldn't keep the Purple from cutting the hosts' lead to 19-17 at intermission.

Gradually, however, the eventual winners drew away, assuming command by 28-22 as the final quarter started, and as the last horn sounded were boosting their advantage by leaps and bounds.

The Tigers used only five men, and one of these was Freddy Vinson, the diminutive captain, who has been out of town for the last three Wilson games. Don Hillock, as is his custom, led the attack with 13 points, but Rookie Johnny Coffey was only one point behind.

Gonzaga's leading scorers were Bernie Nolan and Reds Murphy, who tallied 9 and 8 points, respectively.

Judge Will Rule Today on Zivic Fight Injunction

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 13.—Supreme Court Justice Louis A. Valenti today reserved decision in the suit for an injunction to postpone the welterweight boxing bout between Ray Robinson and Fritzie Zivic at Madison Square Garden Friday. The justice said he would rule tomorrow on the injunction sought by Herman Taylor, Philadelphia promoter.

Taylor named as defendants, Robinson; his manager, Curt Hirzmann; Mike Jacobs, New York promoter, and the New York State Athletic Commission. The Philadelphia promoter claims Robinson entered into an agreement with him to fight Marty Servo. The State Athletic Commission refused to consider Taylor's complaint because it said it does not recognize oral contracts.

Eagles Nose Out Seagulls, 6 to 5, in 'Clean' Hockey Battle

No Fights Mark Clash Before 2200 Fans at Riverside; Dickie Is 'Goat'

By Jack Munhall

The Washington Eagles and the Atlantic City Sea Gulls kept their sticks on the puck instead of in each other's face last night for a change, and in a surprisingly clean match for them the Eagles won, 6-5, to strengthen their hold on fourth place. Twenty-two hundred paying fans saw the Eastern Amateur League battle at Riverside Stadium.

There wasn't even the sign of a good, healthy fight as the Eagles displayed greatly improved passing and shooting, especially by the Ullyot-Thompson-Hickey line, to even their personal score with Leith Dickie, the young goalie they released to the Sea Gulls December 16. Dickie had beaten Red Mackenzie's men, 6-2, on their last appearance at Atlantic City.

With Hickey firing three goals and one assist, the Eagles never trailed after the middle of the first period, although the individual brilliance of Center Tom Burlington, of the Sea Gulls, kept the issue in doubt until the end. Burlington, the league's leading scorer and just about the slickest skater in the circuit, rapped in a pair of goals.

McCormack Scores

Tom McCormack, stocky Washington center, celebrated his return to the line-up after an 11-day-injury-enforced absence, by scoring two goals. The other Washington point fell to Art Thompson.

Only five penalties, all of them minor, were called in what was by far the cleanest match these bitter rivals have staged here.

Borden Wheeler gave the Sea Gulls their only lead when at 10:05 of the opening period he criss-crossed in front of the Washington goal and then slid a backhander through Craig McClelland. Hickey came along at 11:53 with the first of his trio of markers to deadlock the count. He took the puck from Ullyot and his shot was effectively screened by another mate.

Going into the second period McCormack installed the Eagles in a 2-1 lead with a point set up by his own clever skating and stick handling. But then the Sea Gulls took advantage of a lapse in the Washington defense once again to even the score. At the time Atlantic City was a player shy owing to an interference penalty by Zill Zippel. With all the Eagles up ice Defenseman Stu Cheetham intercepted the puck and fed a lead pass to Burlington who scored easily when none of the Eagles showed enough interest to try and intercept him.

Gull Hopes Die

That was at 9:37, but whatever hopes the Sea Gulls had of forging ahead were dispelled at 11:00 by Thompson's goal on a double pass from Ullyot and Hickey. At 14:59 McCormack again drew cheers for his adept handling of the rubber and the Eagles boosted their lead to 4-2.

On this play McCormack found himself directly in front of Dickie with the puck. Shaking his shoulders and his head he feinted this way and then that until Dickie was dizzy from changing direction. Finally McCormack shoved the puck in without trouble.

Burlington narrowed the Seagulls' deficit to 3-4 on his second goal as he fooled Defensemen Art Lessard and Len Burrage, but the Eagles pulled the unusual to get back the goal when they were a man shy. Lessard being in the box. Hickey made the goal after taking a long pass from Burrage and outdistancing his pursuers, thus Washington enjoyed a 5-3 lead as they entered the final session.

Les Cunningham put in one for the Gulls at 8:44 on a shoulder-high drive, but at 7:16 Hickey popped up with what proved the decisive shot, a beauty from way over in the corner. Thus it mattered little that Billy Hodgins, a newcomer for the Seagulls, closed the game's scoring at 18:49.

G. U. Teams Suffer Heavy Losses to Service

Doolan, Rogers, Burke And Fullilove Among Men Leaving School

The armed services and other factors are taking a heavy toll of Georgetown University star athletes and coaches, it was learned yesterday. Among the outstanding Hoya athletes already gone from school are Jack Doolan, Lou Collado, Al Rogers and Bill Mulley, all dependables of Hap Hardell's track team. Doolan also is a crack football player.

Bill Burke, one of the Hilltop's freshman football coaches, joined the Naval Air Corps December 29, while Earl Fullilove, another fresh mentor, is seeking with Doolan to join the Army Air Corps. Fullilove and Doolan are to take their physical examinations this morning in Baltimore. Joe Crocker, varsity football manager, has already taken that exam. Fullilove is due to be graduated from the Hilltop in February.

Jack Hagerty's football team will be virtually wrecked before another season rolls around. George Perpich, a regular tackle; Joe Gyorgydeak, the first-string fullback, and Mickey Ford, exceptionally promising freshman fullback, are certain to be missing, along with many more that are likely to be drafted. This does not include those who will flunk out after midwinter exams.

Coach Hardell declared last night that the loss of Doolan, Rogers, Collado and Mulley would mean the difference between a great and creditable mile relay team for Georgetown.

"We would have had a team to lick them all," Hardell said. "Now we'll be only creditable. You see, we didn't have many boys to start with and so the loss of any one of them would have been bad.

"However, we've still got Al Blozis and that means we'll be getting points in any meet we enter."

Hardell said that though his relay team was wrecked it would, as usual, run in all the big meets of the winter circuit, starting with the Millrose Games in New York February 7.

Father John J. Kehoe, Georgetown faculty moderator of athletics, said Collado had left school to take a job in support of his ill father, while Rogers and Mulley did so because their draft numbers would soon be up.

Doolan, a junior who did 9.6 in the dual meet with Navy last spring for his best 100-yard mark, might have been the Nation's top sprinter this year, and was almost certain to be tops in his senior year, Hardell said. The Georgetown coach also has particular reason to mourn the leaving of Collado, perhaps the greatest long-distance running prospect the Hoyas have ever had.

As a freshman, Collado last year established a Millrose meet record for the 1000 yards in Madison Square Garden. He also ran anchor on the Georgetown freshman team that won the National A. A. U. indoor title last winter in the time of 3 minutes 19 seconds. Rogers was lead-off man of that team.

Nucigus for Georgetown's 1-mile relay team which, besides Blozis in the weight events, will be the school's only entry in the indoor meets, consists of Charley Williams, Paul O'Donnell and Jim Fish from last year's squad, and Al Short, up from the freshmen. Ken Lyden, a junior, who was counted on for big success in the middle distances, did not return to school. Lost by graduation last year were Mort Ainwick, one of the Hoya's greatest trackmen of all times, and Pete McAtee and Charley Neumeyer, also members of the varsity 1-mile relay team, which was one of the best in the East.

8,288 See Chalky Wright Lose To Bobby Ruffin in Big Upset

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 13.—Bobby Ruffin, highly regarded Long Island youngster, sprang the major ratic upset of the winter season tonight by outspeeding Chalky Wright, recognized in New York as world featherweight champion, in a flashing 10-rounder in the Bronx Coliseum. Ruffin weighed 132, Wright, 128¼.

Before a crowd of 8288, Ruffin took a wide early lead and then stood off the stretch drive of the Los Angeles Negro slugger.

The referee and both judges voted in favor of the local youngster. The Associated Press score card gave each warrior four rounds and called two even.

Ruffin got off fast by charging in close and flailing away with both hands to the body at short range. Wright came on through the fourth and fifth and again in the eighth and ninth.

The eighth was by far the best round. In that heat he punched the Long Islander all over the place and opened a sharp wound over his left eye.

Wright seemed unable to pull the trigger on his dangerous right most of the time, and that probably cost him the fight, or at least a draw, as Ruffin pegged away with left-hand shots and galloped all around the 128-pound boss in most of the rounds.

Business Manager Of Mud Hens Quits

Toledo, Ohio, Jan. 13 (AP).—The St. Louis Browns announced today that Morris Shawkey had resigned, effective January 15, as business manager of the Toledo Mud Hens of the American Association.

Shawkey, who declined to discuss his future plans, had been business manager of the Toledo club five years.

Tech Beaten By Bethesda Five, 31 to 27

A spurt in the final few seconds gave Bethesda-Chevy Chase High five a 31-27 margin over Tech last night after a tight game that could have gone either way.

With a 29-27 edge and 20 seconds of play left, Carl Jullien, spindly Baron forward, ripped the cords with a long shot to clinch the game at Bethesda's gym.

Previously Bethesda had boasted an 11-7 lead after one period, saw that vanish before a Tech onslaught and turn into an 18-17 advantage for the invaders at the half. Struggling in the third session brought the teams up all even at 24-24 before the Barons took their winning margin.

Hank Pizza, of Tech, emerged with most points for the game, 10, and Teammate Thompson's 9 counters also beat out the high Baron point-maker, Dick Poerstel, who had 7.

Explorers Seek Sixth Victory Here Tonight

Columbus University will be favored to get back into the victory column tonight when the Explorers play host to the St. Francis College Red Flashes, of Loretto, Pa., at Tech gym at 8:30 p. m.

The visitors ,who played here several times prior to last season against Catholic University, have met two major foes this season and lost to both, Villanova, 48-36, and Seton Hall, 58-30. Their conquerors are both among the outstanding teams in the East.

Columbus will be after its sixth victory in eight starts. The Explorers lost to Baltimore Monday night after leading at one time by 9 points and dropped an earlier decision to Marshall. Coach Ben Kail's club has beaten Potomac State, Rider, Lockhaven, Davis Elkins and Shepherd State.

Jimmy Darby, of Irwin, Pa., and Eddie Meconi, of Cumberland, Md., are the top performers for the Pennsylvania quintet, which dropped 8 of 14 games last year.

The Red Flashes are coached by J. Francis (Pep) Salony.

Billy Richardson Named to E. H. S. Coaching Post

Temporary appointment of Billy Richardson, former Central High and George Washington University backfield ace, to the coaching staff at Eastern High was announced yesterday by Principal Charles Hart and Physical Education Head Hardy Pearce.

Richardson, one of the smallest gridmen ever to perform on a local eleven, will replace Mike Kelley, veteran track and football mentor, who has been called to active duty as a major in the Marine Corps. Whether the appointee will take over Kelley's coaching duties will be up to Principal Hart.

Tiger Boss Plans Draft Survey

Detroit, Jan. 13 (INS).—With the prediction that baseball will be able to "carry on" during the war, Jack Zeller, general manager of the Detroit Tigers, said today he was planning a survey of possible "adjustments" on the Tiger roster.

Zeller said that he intended to mail inquiries to each member of the club as to his war status—whether he faces service with the Nation's armed forces via the draft or enlistment.

Zeller said "there may be something new breaking for the Tigers" at the special meeting in New York on February 2 of American League officials.

Earl Springer, Former Terp Star, in 1-A

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Jan. 13. — Tommy Thomas, manager of the Orioles, said today that Earl Springer, Hagerstown lad who is one of his brightest young mound prospects, is in Class 1-A and will probably be called to the colors within a week.

SPRINGER

Springer came out of the University of Maryland two seasons ago and was signed by the Orioles. Last summer he got off to a poor start so Manager Thomas optioned him to his home club, Hagerstown, for further seasoning. Springer ended the season exceptionally well.

The impending loss of Springer will bring the Oriole loss in the draft to three, Rookies Randall Phillips and Bob Burns having previously been inducted. Whether or not the reclassification program will change Eddie Robinson's deferred status is one of Manager Thomas' chief worries. Robinson's work around first base and at the plate has attracted the attention of Connie Mack. Robinson was with Elmira last season.

Reiselt Sets World's Record In 3-Cushion Cue Tourney

By International News Service

Chicago, Jan. 13.—Otto Reiselt, colorful Philadelphia contestant, registered a high run of ten billiards to set a new record for the 1942 World's Three-cushion Tournament today as he drubbed Earl Lookabaugh, of Chicago, 50 to 26, in 34 innings.

The former record of nine billiards had been set by Welker Cochran, of San Francisco, and tied by Jake Schaefer, of Philadelphia, and Ralph Greenleaf, of New York.

Reiselt's victory was his second in three games, and he showed a complete reversal of the form he exhibited last night in losing to Arthur Thurnblad, of Kenosha, Wis.

Greenleaf, 17 times the world's pocket billiards champion, won his second straight match in the tournament earlier today by defeating Arthur Rubin, of Brooklyn, 50 to 40, in 51 innings. The win tied Greenleaf with Joe Chamaco, the Mexico champion, for the current tournament lead. Rubin's defeat was his third in as many games.

A report of the chief veterinarian of the Florida State racing commission said: "Saliva test taken on Victory Bound at Tropical Park, January 9, 1942, on chemical analysis showed a stimulant had been administered to this animal."

BOBBY:

Well, anybody knows it's the phone. But why does it keep ringing?

And you call me a dumb bunny! Didn't you hear your Pa say he put a Want Ad in the "Miscellaneous for Sale" column of The Post?

A Want Ad—in The Post? Oh, sure—to sell all that stuff in the cellar. My old bassinet and baby scale, and Mom's sewing machine, and those extra chairs and rugs and vases. But what's that got to do with the phone ringing, all morning long?

Look, Bobby — concentrate! When you put a Want Ad in The Post you get action—fast! Because who reads The Post? The people who know things, like things and have the money to buy. Right now your Pa is getting more inquiries from interested Post readers than he can handle. Results, Bobby, hot off the wire!

Oh, he's smart, my Daddy—like me. But you know what?

No, what?

That phone, Big Ears—I wonder why it keeps ringing!

6 Dixie Governors, Honor Guests, See Thrilling Stretch Duel on Closing Day

By the Associated Press

Tropical Park, Fla., Jan. 13.—With Governors of six Southern States included in the crowd of 6777, the Gables Racing Association's first meeting under the "new deal" came to a successful close here this afternoon. The Matacumba Purse, a 6-furlong dash for 3-year-olds, drew the best field, including several that had raced in stakes competition, and saw A. C. Ernst's Alohort scoring a photo triumph at $15.60 for $2.

S. I. Crew's Putitthere bowed in the last stride while beating Jake Freedman's Wood Robin by a length and a half for the place. War Melody, the hot favorite, was a tired fourth. The time for the 6 furlongs was 1:12.

Alfred Robertson, following an extended vacation, accepted his first mount of the meeting astride Alohort. The popular veteran was loudly applauded during the post parade and after his victory. Despite a lack of recent competition, the "uncanny Scot" who rode six winners at Jamaica last fall put up what many deemed the greatest ride of the local season. His powerful whipping finish even outdid that of the husky Eddie Arcaro on the second horse.

The total attendance for this 21-day wartime meeting was 146,477, a daily average of 6975. The corresponding meeting a year ago, when only 16 programs were offered, showed an average of 7898, or 923 more per day.

Among States represented by their chief executives here today were: Florida, Spessard L. Holland; Alabama, Frank Dixon; Tennessee, Prentice Cooper; Georgia, Eugene Talmadge; North Carolina, J. Melville Broughton, and Arkansas, Homer Adkins.

Prior to the opening of the getaway card, the new track owners presented a $1000 check each to representatives of the Army Relief Society, the Naval Relief Society and the Red Cross war relief drive.

Alhort, like his rider, had received a long rest, but came back fresh and thoroughly fit. He gradually reached contention and only made the grade with a maximum of help from his rider. Putitthere raced War Melody and Anna-A-Vish into defeat and held on gamely to stave off the fast-closing Wood Robin.

Racing Scene Shifts

Market Wise Favored In Hialeah Inaugural

Miami Track, Opening 46-Day Meet, Draws Cream of Nation's Thoroughbred Racers

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Jan. 13.—Riding the crest of war's backwash, Hialeah Park opens a history-making race meet tomorrow with a fast field stepping off the $5000 Inaugural Handicap.

With California's tracks stilled by war's threats, this stately, palm-dotted plant will be the turf capital of the world for 46 days and will present the fastest horses in the land—perhaps the greatest collection ever to be stabled at a single track.

Beginning with the inaugural and ending with the $50,000 Widener Handicap, Hialeah's 11 stakes will be the top racing events of the season because no other track of similar caliber will be operating.

Market Wise Choice Today

Louis Tufano's Market Wise, conqueror of Whirlaway and a sensational performer last year, was the over-night favorite over 20 other thoroughbreds entered in the 6-furlong inaugural, for 3-year-olds and up.

Assigned top weight of 126 pounds, Market Wise will make the bid under the veteran Alfred Robertson.

Strong support was forthcoming for R. W. Collins' Sweet Willow and L. H. Meyer's Sheriff Caulkin, in at 120 and 118 pounds respectively, but there were dangerous threats at longer prices.

Greentree Stable's Cherry Jam, handled by Eddie Arcaro, and W. Hirschensohn's Dekalb, with 1941 riding Champion Don Meade up, were not overlooked by those who like to follow the jockeys.

2-Year-Olds in Spotlight

Another opening feature will be the first start of a promising new herd of 2-year-olds. Eighteen of the youngsters will run in the first event, a 3-furlong sprint down the straightaway nursery course.

Hialeah picks up where Tropical Park leaves off after a 21-day winter meeting. Although attendance and mutuel play at Tropical were somewhat off, the new owners counted the meeting a success in view of the war and other factors.

Pro Basketers To Give Ladies, Draftees Break

Another ladies night and service men's night will be observed by the Washington Brewers Sunday at Turner's Arena for their American Professional Basketball League game with the Champion Philadelphia Sphas.

The response from last Sunday's ladies night was so gratifying that Coach-Manager Mack Posnak is returning with the same program. Feminine fans when accompanied by male escorts will be admitted free. Service men will be admitted for half price.

The Brewers also will pay tribute to Dr. James A. Naismith, the founder of basketball, during the game. It will be the Golden Jubilee of the cage game, with the Brewers turning over a portion of the gross proceeds to the Naismith Memorial Fund, which is seeking to raise $300,000 to erect a Temple of Basketball in Springfield, Mass., birthplace of the game.

The week's schedule finds Philadelphia at Trenton, Friday; New York Jewels at Wilmington, Saturday, in a contest that all-important to the Brewers; Trenton at Philadelphia, Saturday.

Coach Posnak still is casting about for replacements. Whether Pete Berenson, star guard, and Irving Rizzi, also a guard, can recover from ailments in time for Sunday's battle with the Sphas is problematical.

Fishing with JACK BELL

As anglers and nimrods gather and talk war and long for spring, about the only activity they can find in their favorite sports for the next three months is fly-tying and shooting crows. Although neither of these sports is of a major variety, they do have their lot of enthusiastic boosters. One offers warm indoor pastime, the other invigorating outdoor thrills.

Ice-fishing is another sport which is now being enjoyed in almost every State north of Pennsylvania. Some anglers have large and comfortable cabins which they slide onto the ice and watch their flags from well-heated cabins. Smelt fishing through the ice on the tidal rivers of Maine is a good sport and by far the most comfortable.

Sliding your cabin on the ice, it is a matter of setting it over some holes and fishing from a comfortable chair, listening to the radio while the chowder is cooking.

The best ice-fishing catch so far this season was a 25-pound togue, or lake trout, taken from Moosehead Lake.

During a recent raid alarm in New York and vicinity, Game Warden Harold S. Ganepi, of Yonkers, N. Y., received an urgent call from a woman who insisted she needed a game warden. Ganepi dropped everything and dashed out to answer duty's call.

Upon his arrival, the lady told him she was boarding six children and was taking every precaution for their safety. She had called the game warden for help in arranging games for the children to play during the alert.

Ganepi now agrees that war is what Gen. Sherman said it was.

Virginia's fish restocking program began nearly 12 years ago with the construction of a trout hatchery at Marion. Since then a trout rearing station has been built at Montebello, and hatcheries for bass and other warm-water species have been built at Front Royal and at Stevensville.

The Stevensville plant, most recent link in the chain of hatcheries, is still under construction but it is already producing large-mouth bass and pan fish in large numbers. Small-mouth bass and other species are raised at Front Royal. The small-mouth bass are the hardest of all species to raise in the hatcheries.

Many large-size fish are released in Virginia waters each year. Trout are now held at the hatcheries until they reach a length of about 8 inches, for it has been found that better fishing results from stocking a stream with a small number of the larger fish than from the releasing of millions of tiny fry just hatched.

Fish experts do not feel that the artificial restocking of streams and ponds should entirely take the place of natural reproduction, nor do they believe that the production of fish in hatcheries lessens the need for control of pollution and silting of productive waters. Hatcheries, they say, are able only to augment the natural productivity of streams and ponds where the steadily growing army of anglers threatens to deplete the natural fish supply.

The quick surrender of Hongkong was caused by the destruction of its water supply system, and not by lack of adequate resistance on the part of the armed garrison. Likewise many of America's cities and industrial areas could be quickly subjugated should their water supply systems be destroyed in time of siege.

In modern warfare one of the first objectives of enemy bombers would be the vital water supply plants. American cities are now surrounded and flanked by rivers and lakes of fresh water, unusable due to their polluted condition. Our governmental bodies should take immediate steps to bring about prompt abatement of such pollution, which is, in fact, a most serious menace to our national defense and welfare.

The Washington, D. C., Chapter of the Izaak Walton League, having some money lying idle in its treasury, voted at its last meeting to put it to work for defense by the purchase of two $100 defense bonds.

Appointment of J. Hammond Brown, radio and outdoor editor in Baltimore, as regional coordinator for the physical fitness defense division of the Office of Civilian Defense was announced by Edward N. Decker, national coordinator, in New York.

The region in which outdoor recreational facilities will be studied and supervised includes Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia.

The primary function of the division is to regulate outdoor activities, such as fishing, hunting, camping, hiking, outdoor winter sports and boating in all its phases.

"Brownie," as he is known to the many sportsmen of Washington and vicinity, in addition to his radio and outdoor writings is national president of the Outdoor Writers Association of America, an international organization embracing Canada, the British Bahamas, Bermuda, Cuba and Mexico.

Brownie is also the founder and president of the Brotherhood of Jungle Cock, a country-wide organization formed to promote good sportsmanship on the Nation's trout streams.

Appointment of State and community directors of the division will be made shortly, Mr. Brown said.

Rangers Rout Brooklyn, 9-2, Before 15,209

By the United Press

New York, Jan. 13.—The New York Rangers swamped the Brooklyn Americans, 9 to 2, and extended their nonshutout string to 78 games tonight—a National Hockey League record. A crowd of 15,209 customers saw the Blue Shirts net five times in 3 minutes and 37 seconds.

The Rangers now ride a seven-game nonlosing streak. It took 1:36 of the first period for Lynn Patrick to score the record breaker. Alf Pike and Mac Colville assisted.

Red Wings Beaten By Bruins, 2 to 1

Boston, Jan. 13 (INS).—Flash Hollett, Boston Bruins' defenseman, scored two goals tonight to lead his team to a 2-to-1 victory over the high-scoring Detroit Red Wings in a listless National Hockey League game.

Hollett brought the Bruins even with the Wings at 10:39 of the second period, scoring on a pass from Milt Schmidt. He clinched the contest at 13:17 of the third period on a pass from Roy Conacher.

Terps' Travis Leads Scorers; Has 126 Points

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Jan. 13.—Ernie Travis, 195-pound, 6-foot-3 rookie center of the University of Maryland's surprising sophomore basketball team, remained well out in front of the State's individual college scorers today, with 126 points, 79 of them coming in the Terps' four games beginning with the City College of New York clash December 31.

Travis, 19-year-old recruit from Roosevelt High, Silver Spring, showed he knew what to do with a basketball by a convincing one-man scoring show against some of the strongest college competition in the East and South.

For instance, the lank pilot startled New York fans by pouring in 10 field goals and 3 charity tosses against C. C. N. Y., although his outfit was absorbing a 57-40 trimming. St. John's of Brooklyn swamped the Terps, 64-48, but Travis canned 24 points.

Then Ernie led his mates to a snappy 35-34 upset over Virginia last week, and was able to get "only" 20 points. Maryland almost scored another upset over Duke last Friday, losing in the final moments, 37-33, and Travis accounted for an even dozen points, running his season's total for eight games to 51 field goals and 24 foul conversions.

The ten leading scorers (with ties) in all State College games through January 12 are:

Travis, Maryland	126
Winitsky, Baltimore University	107
Oberhaus, Baltimore University	103

Pepco's Sales In Year Exceed Billion K.W.H.

By S. Oliver Goodman

For the first time in the history of the Potomac Electric Power Co., sales for a full year exceeded a billion kilowatt hours.

Pepco's monthly report released yesterday showed December sales of 85,202,708 kilowatt hours, bringing the aggregate for 1941 to 1,008,460,172 kilowatt hours. This compared with 74,853,775 kilowatt hours in December, 1940, and 856,401,815 aggregate for 1940.

The December total was 13.8 per cent heavier than in the same month last year and the 12-month figure was 17 per cent greater than in 1940.

Reflecting dimming of street lights, Pepco reported that sales in December for public street and highway lighting totaled 2,564,697 kilowatt hours, a 6.5 per cent drop under the same month of last year. Sales for railroad purposes increased 18.6 per cent in the month while sales for all other purposes were 13.8 per cent larger.

President Robert V. Fleming explained that the increased dividend will mean the elimination hereafter of the usual $2 extra dividend in January. However, a special dividend of $2 a share was voted for this January prior to placing the common on a regular $10 annual basis.

The special dividend is payable January 15 to holders of record January 12. The $2.50 dividend on the common stock was voted for the first two quarters, payable January 15 and April 15 to holders of record January 12 and March 31. A dividend on the preferred stock, payable February 1, also was declared.

Rubber, Metal Shares Score Brisk Upturn

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 13.—The stock market today pinned its recovery ribbons on a wide assortment of issues with commodity affiliations and left many leaders to trudge over a narrow area.

The general trend was upward from the start following Washington announcement of a 400 million dollar synthetic rubber manufacturing program and the disclosure the Government would pay handsome premiums on production of copper, lead and zinc in excess of 1941 volumes.

Buying centered mainly on rubbers, metals, oils, chemicals, steels and specialties that might benefit by the expanded plans for boosting armament materials. There were wavering intervals during the session but gains of 1 to 3 points or more were widespread and around the best of the day at the close.

Dealings Speed Up

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks finished with a net advance of .5 of a point at 38.3, the second day's upturn after a week's hiatus. It was the largest recovery in this index since January 3. There were frequent slowdowns, but dealings speeded up in the final hour and transfers totalled 725,030 shares against 491,540 the day before.

Heartening war news from Russia contrasted with cloudy bulletins from Far Eastern battle fronts and the market was unable to work up much stimulation from these sources. In addition, tax worries persisted as a handicap for many issues. Business developments were viewed as moderately constructive.

Encouragement was derived from the plans to free this country from dependence on the Orient for its rubber supplies. In the new line-up chemical, oil and allied industries were expected to pool their patents, technical processes and personnel. The thought arose that companies concerned might stand to benefit substantially in the way of enhanced income.

Rubber Shares Lead

Prominent stocks on the swing included U. S. Rubber common and preferred (the latter was up 4½ points on a small turnover), Goodyear, Goodrich, Anaconda, Kennecott, Cerro De Pasco, American Smelting, Phelps Dodge, Patino Mines, Standard Oil (N J.), Texas Co., American Zinc, St. Joseph Lead, Fajardo Sugar, Union Carbide, du Pont, Eastman Kodak, J. C. Penney, Chrysler, Douglas Aircraft, U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Youngstown Sheet, Westinghouse, Dow Chemical and American Can.

Rails showed only modest improvement and utilities did little or nothing.

Staples Are Lower

Bonds improved. Farm staples backed away after Monday's buoyancy, apparently reflecting reported administrative opposition to the Senate's vote on privileged rating for agricultural products in the price control bill. Wheat was off 2½ to 2¾ cents a bushel at Chicago, Corn 1 to 1¼ lower and hogs down 10 to 20 cents. Cotton lost 50 to 65 cents a bale.

Rising in the Curb were Aluminum of America, Humble Oil, Gulf Oil, N. J. Zinc and American Cyanamid "B." Axton-Fisher Tobacco "A" was up 7½ on a few trades as talk was heard of a recapitalization proposal to take care of accumulated dividends on the company's senior issues. Dealings aggregated 111,000 shares versus 68,000 Monday.

Foreign Copper Deliveries Set New High Level

New York, Jan. 13 (AP).—December deliveries of foreign copper to the Metals Reserve Co., the Government purchasing agency, reached the 50,000-ton mark and established a new high level, the Copper Institute disclosed today.

At the same time total deliveries to domestic consumers of 137,368 tons set a new top for December and was the second largest monthly total on record. This was a rise of 14,200 tons over November.

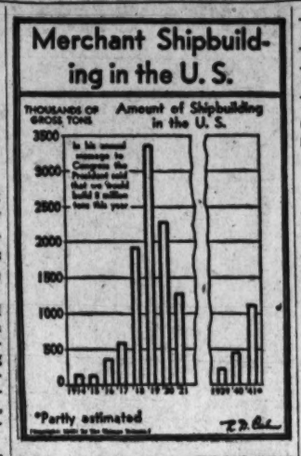
Crude copper production in December amounted to 86,961 tons from domestic sources, against 84,718 in November. Refined production expanded to 89,940 tons from 84,799.



U. S. Locks Out Five Executives Of Gen. Aniline

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 13.—Five officers of General Aniline & Film Corp. were ordered suspended today and barred from the one-time German controlled company's offices in a notice received from the Treasury Department in Washington.

They were:

Dr. Rudolph Hutz, director.

Hans Aickelin, former director, now a vice president.

F. W. Van Meister, plant manager at Johnson City, N. Y.

Leopold Eckler, assistant vice president and plant manager of the AGFA-Ansco division at Binghamton, N. Y.

The order, as quoted by a company official, said:

"Effective immediately (the officials named) are to be suspended from General Aniline and Film Corp. and barred from all company premises until further notice.

"All company officials and employes are to be advised immediately that they are not to communicate with any of these individuals directly or indirectly without my prior written approval. (Signed) J. O'Connell, Treasury representative."

A group of more than a dozen Treasury representatives moved in on the huge dye manufacturing company's offices and plants early last December, "with a view to examining in detail and supervising the operations of the company," assets of which had been frozen.

Subsequently, two new directors were named in what company President John E. Mack called "a step forward in Americanization of the firm." General Aniline had been under investigation for possible German influences and more lately indicted with its selling agent, General Dyestuffs Corp., and the giant German I. G. Farbenindustrie on a charge of restraint of trade and manufacture of heavy chemicals and dyestuffs.

Lead Price Rise Is Authorized By Henderson

By the Associated Press

Price Administrator Leon Henderson authorized a .65 cent a pound increase in the price of common primary lead yesterday, inaugurating one phase of a double-barreled Government drive to increase production of lead, copper and zinc in the face of increasing demands for the metals by war industries.

Simultaneously, Henderson announced ceiling prices on secondary lead and lead scrap, keyed to the maximum base price of 6.50 cents a pound F. O. B. New York, established for primary lead. He also telegraphed requests to manufacturers of metallic lead products and lead pigments not to make sales at prices above January 2 levels.

At the same time the Office of Price Administration rearranged maximum prices on aluminum plant scrap yesterday to encourage segregation of high grade scrap and expedite its use in the manufacture of new aluminum for planes and other important military equipment.

Your Federal Income Tax

By Bureau of Internal Revenue

No. 10—Information for Employers

Salaried persons and wage earners whose income is derived from personal services form the largest number of Federal income taxpayers. This year this army of taxpayers will be greatly increased. Those who paid an income tax for 1940 have received the forms for the 1941 income tax return through the mails.

In order that none may escape filing the return, employers are required to report on Form 1099, accompanied by transmittal Form 1096, the names of all their employes to whom, if single, they made payments of $750 or more in 1941, and if married, $1500 or more. If the marital status of the employe is unknown, he must be reported as single.

These returns should be filed on or before February 15, 1942, with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Returns Distribution Section, Washington, D. C.

The law contemplates that every individual, if single, or if married but not living with spouse, whose gross income for 1941 was $750 or more, must file an income-tax return. Excuses for not doing so do not relieve the delinquent from responsibility for the delinquency.

Neither the President of the United States, nor the Vice President nor Federal judges, nor Members of Congress, are exempt from filing returns.

All types of compensation, unless specially excluded by statute, should be incorporated in the gross income of the taxpayer. A minister of the Gospel, for instance, must report all fees he receives—for funerals, for masses, for baptisms, for marriages, and for other like services. In addition to salaries, wages, fees and commissions, all bonuses, tips, prizes, awards, retiring allowances for past services, and other forms of compensation are rated as part of one's income. If a person is paid in whole or in part for his services by anything other than money, the fair market value of the thing taken must be reported as income.

Compensation credited to the account of or set apart for a taxpayer, without any substantial limitation or restriction, and which may be drawn upon by him at any time, is subject to tax for the year during which so credited or set apart, although not then actually reduced to possession. If the services were rendered during the year 1940, or even prior thereto, but the compensation was not received, or made unqualifiedly subject to demand by the taxpayer until 1941, the entire amount is taxable in 1941 when the taxpayer is reporting on the cash receipts and disbursements basis, which is the basis used by most individuals in reporting net income.

Banks' Credit Role to Expand, Says Aldrich

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 13.—Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of the Chase National Bank, said today that as the war progresses, "banks will be called upon more and more to put their credit at the disposal of the Nation."

Aldrich said Government reliance on commercial bank credit to finance war expenditure "tends to bring about inflation, whereas the use of bank credit to finance industry diminishes the chances of inflation."

Looking ahead to the end of the war, Aldrich urged the purchase of defense savings bonds as a means of putting purchasing power into the hands of people after the war.

"Next to taxation itself, these obligations of the Treasury are best designed to satisfy the economic requirements of war financing, for they devote current income and funds awaiting investment to the war needs of the Government, and to that extent they reduce the inflationary danger of war spending," Aldrich said.

Far East Units Hit

Aldrich, in reviewing the bank's 1941 operations, said Chase now has no commitments in Germany, Italy or Japan, nor any unsecured commitments in any of the countries occupied by the Axis powers.

The executive said operations of the Chase Bank, wholly owned affiliate with branches in France and the Far East, "have been carried on under great difficulties."

French branch deposit liabilities and expanses have been reduced. Poor communications made it impossible to report fully the situation of branches in Shanghai, Hongkong and Tientsin, he added.

He said it was indicated that personnel at those points were unharmed, and he understood Japanese authorities had instructed the Shanghai branch to resume restricted and supervised banking operations.

Gordon S. Rentschler, chairman of the National City Bank of New York, commenting on deposits in his annual report, said that after two years of "extraordinarily rapid growth, our deposits, along with those of other New York banks, ceased their upward movement about mid-year and turned down."

The change, he said, was due to a "near cessation of gold imports, an increase in the use of currency, and an outflow of funds from New York to the interior."

Alien Setup Contracted

The National City executive said the bank during 1941 continued to contract its foreign organization.

Transfer of business of the subsidiary International Banking Corp. in Spain to a Spanish commercial bank, and winding up of the French subsidiary of that corporation left the National City Bank with no offices in Europe other than two branches in London. National City owns International Banking Corp.

Closing of Branches in Kobe, Osaka and Yokohoma, as well as Harbin and Dairen in Manchuria, left only one branch in Japan, one at Tokyo. Chinese operations also were contracted.

"Our potential exposure is larger in Manila where about half the assets represent local credits and the balance rest upon values outside the Philippines, such as the obligations of American banks or business corporations," Rentschler said.

Tax Rise Might Slow Output, Sen. George Tells Retailers

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 13.—Senator Walter F. George (Democrat), of Georgia, today said he felt certain there would be increases in corporate taxes to help pay the war bill but warned that income taxes on those in the middle brackets might lower their morale and slow production.

Senator George, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, told the National Retail Dry Goods Association convention the price control bill now in Congress would not be entirely effective in preventing a trend toward inflation.

"Whether there will be an increase in excess profit taxes or surtaxes, I don't know," he said, "but I think it more likely the increase will come in the surtaxes."

He said there may be some increase in individual income taxes and added:

"We should remember that increased taxes against persons in the higher brackets may cripple them but will not destroy them under our democratic form of Government."

Might Cripple Economy

Then, asserting "we cannot greatly increase the present tax on those persons in the middle brackets, I mean economic class and not social," he said:

"That is the class that mgiht be destroyed under a representative government when their taxes become too high."

The tendency, he said, is to yield to the temptation to increase the taxes of those in the income brackets between $5000 and $8000 but warned:

"If we do, we certainly will cripple our economy."

In his warning against inflation during the war effort, the Senator said price control alone would not stop it.

"We must use every means to stop inflation," he said. "Through taxes, price control and all other legitimate methods. We must raise the highest maximum money possible through taxes."

Indicating that mandatory joint income tax returns by married persons living together may be required, the Senator said:

"If married people in America are anxious to win this war they will be willing to submit to this although there may be economic arguments against it."

Although President Roosevelt has not spoken of the time arriving yet for imposition of a sales tax, the Senator continued, "it would not seem possible to raise seven or ten billion dollars without going into some new forms of taxation."

in which his usual adept eye has been missing in six of the seven games this season.

In Zunic and O'Grady the rivals will floor two of the smoothest courtmen seen locally in many years, and two practically opposite types.

3500 Expected

Due to early-season setbacks for both clubs they have been drawing much less than last year but at least 3500 are expected tomorrow. Every one of the 1800 who saw the Hoyas beat Temple will likely be back, at least. The fire marshal was forced to close the doors at the second meeting last year when the schools packed nearly 6000 into Riverside in a game in which Georgetown knocked G. W. out of two postseason invitations.

The preliminary attraction between the G. U. and G. W. frosh fives, both unbeaten and both touted as the best in years, should prove an incentive to get to the stadium early. The Colonial frosh won both games last year, but this year's G. U. five has been routing its high school and prep opponents by 30 and 40-point margins.

Another home game tomorrow night finds Catholic University in its seventh Mason-Dixon test of the year against Johns Hopkins of Baltimore. The Cardinals are batting .667 with four victories and two defeats in league play, but should boost their standing against the Johnnies. C. U. will offer its outstanding home attraction of the season Friday night in Loyola of Baltimore, conference leader and loser only to Villanova in Philadelphia this season.

McCormack To Join Eagles For N. Y. Game

One key man of the Washington Eagles yesterday voiced delight over his ability to compete Friday night when the team entertains the lightning fast New York Rovers at Riverside Stadium in an Eastern Hockey League game that is to donate 10 per cent of its gross receipts to the Blood Bank Fund in a benefit for Children's Hospital under the sponsorship of the Washington Post.

Tommy McCormack, veteran center and winger only recently released from Emergency Hospital, is the player who will be particularly gratified with this opportunity to boost the good cause.

A week ago last Friday night McCormack suffered a headlong crash on the ice at Riverside in a collision with defenseman Alex Sandalack of the Rovers, and was removed to Emergency Hospital where he was treated for twisted ligaments in his left leg and bumps and bruises on his head.

"Believe me," the sincere Tommy said yesterday, "I'm doing everything within my power to cheer hospital shut-ins and help the people carrying on this wonderful hospital work hereafter. I barely escaped serious injury less than a couple of weeks ago, and I've never appreciated so much in my life the treatment I received from Emergency Hospital physicians, nurses and employes, as well as the messages I received from local hockey fans and friends."

ever, and kept plugging. He tied it up on the fourteenth when Hogan three-putted. They halved the next two in par and it looked like another playoff would be called tomorrow.

On the seventeenth Hogan hooked his tee shot into a tree and the ball bounced into a spectator's back, robbing him of a better lie.

Hogan approached to within 2 feet of the flag, however, and appeared ready for the kill. Thomson had a 6-footer, and brought a cheer when he rammed it down for a birdie three to halve the hole.

Hogan, golf's biggest money winner in 1941-42, collected $3500 for his triumph and Thomson won $1700. Thomson won the Los Angeles Open in 1938.

Today's match was all Hogan's on the first nine, and Thomson more than held his own on the trip in. Hogan had four birdies as his iron shots rifled down the fairways, and Thomson had two on the round.

Highlights of Last Night's Pin Matches Around District

BROOKLAND

The Cleveland Park No. 1 boys of the Letter Carriers League at Brookland monopolized the play last night when teammates Sam Lindamood and Jim Thorp combined their individual highs of 155 and 387, respectively, to spark their quintet to all-time record team highs of 634 and 1742. The new records added seven sticks to the old game high and nine to the set. The team also won a pair from Central, but both Connecticut Avenue and the Chevy Chase Rusin managed respective sweeps over Woodridge No. 2 and Woodridge No. 1.

MOUNT RAINIER

CONVENTION HALL

Miles Briggs, MASU, with 128, and Bob Hair, Pasoparts, with 363, topped the State Department League at Convention Hall with the latter's pin toppling helping his quintet to a sweep over Immigration and the posting of team highs of 884 and 1640 as well. Louis Widmer's 358 was the punch his Accounts team needed in whitewashing the DCE No. 1 boys.

SILVER SPRING

Paul Halesky, of Takoma Engineers, with 138-386 topped the Georgia Avenue League at Silver Spring and made it possible for his quintet to win high team game with a 578 total. Hiller Motors, however, was best for the set after a rainfall of 1609 which included three games from Shaver's Men's Shop.

ARLINGTON

Mildred Falconer topped the women of the Arlington Church League with a 112 single and 322 set with the Our Lady of Lourdes team taking three from Calvary Methodist. In the men's division, Lloyd Tubbs' 125 and Buck Hearetty's 127-334 were the leading scores, with the latter's Calvary Men's class team winning highs after a 557 game and 1563 set, also scoring a sweep over opponents.

ICE PALACE

With hefty wallops of 166-374, Donald Scott topped the Industrial League at the Ice Palace and made it possible for his Garrett Service quintet to gain the team honors after posting scores of 901 and 1645, winning two from Irving's Sport Shop as well. Hartman Takes Rev. Tuller's Camp Place

By Robert Tate Allan
Post Church Editor

The Rev. Edwin H. Tuller has resigned as director of the Training Camp Council of the Washington Federation of Churches, and is being succeeded by Grover Hartman, it was learned yesterday.

Resignation of Miss Frances Humphrey as assistant director of the Federation social welfare department to accept a position in the Office of Civilian Defense also was made public by Dr. Worth M. Tippy, acting federation executive secretary.

Mr. Tuller's resignation was motivated by the necessity of retaining his position as assistant pastor of Calvary Baptist Church to aid the Rev. Clarence E. Cranford when he becomes the new pastor in February. For several months, Mr. Tuller has been dividing his time between Cavalry Church and the federation position, but found that each requires full-time duty, he said yesterday in explaining his resignation from the Camp Council.

Mr. Hartman, who has been serving as director of young people's activities at Foundry Methodist Church and as chairman of the department of social studies and faculty advisor on student government at Sidwell Friends' School, was among the original group of clerics and youth leaders who helped Dr. Tippy form the Training Camp Council. It is the liaison agency between Protestant churches and service men and between churches and defense workers.

He is a native of Indiana, where he was graduated from DePauw University, in 1935. He has been active in all youth work at Foundry Church and also in the District and Conference-wide work of the Methodist Church.

Miss Humphrey is among the best-informed workers in the local welfare field. She was trained under the Rev. John L. Mixon, who resigned as social welfare director last June to accept a similar position in the Los Angeles Federation of Churches. She studied research at George Washington University under Prof. Wells. Her new field will embrace recreational and social interests of new Government defense workers.

Miss Humphrey's knowledge of local churches will be helpful in her new field, since churches are carrying on many programs now for the new defense worker. Her successor at the federation has not been selected.

Cadet T. F. Ward, D. C. Youth, Dies In Plane Crash

CADET WARD

He was the son of Mrs. Margaret Campbell Ward, of 2627 Adams Mill Road Northwest, who left last night for Sioux Falls, S. Dak., where burial services will be held tomorrow.

Cadet Ward was graduated from Western High School in 1938, where he played football and basketball. He was born in Watertown, S. Dak., and attended the South Dakota State College from 1938 to 1941, enlisting in the Naval Reserve last June.

Group Appointed To Safeguard Oil For Allied Force

Vice President Wallace announced yesterday creation of a special committee of oil company representatives "to maintain adequate petroleum supplies for our armed forces and those of our Allies."

Wallace, as chairman of the Board of Economic Warfare, said the oil men met with representatives of the Army, Navy and other Government departments to attack the oil problems of the war.

He said the oil companies had formed a "foreign petroleum operating board," composed of the following:

Robert Colley, president, Atlantic Refining Co.; H. D. Collier, president, Standard Oil Co. of California; J. F. Drake, president, Gulf Oil Corporation; W. S. Farish, president, Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey; H. M. Herron, president, California-Texas Oil Co., Ltd.; G. S. Walden, chairman, Standard-Vacuum Oil Co.; James A. Brown, president, Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., and W. S. S. Rodgers, president, the Texas Co.

Wallace added that the State Department was asking British and Dutch oil companies to work with this group.

Oxygen Plant To Be Moved

Conrad C. Smith, vice president and general manager of the Southern Oxygen Co. at the south end of Memorial Bridge, announced last night the company's plant would be moved to the site of the Capitol Airport, near Tuxedo, Md.

Smith said the company had purchased the Capitol Airport and adjacent land totalling 25 acres. The Federal Government is negotiating for the purchase of the site of the company's present plant, Smith explained.

OPM Slaps New Curbs On Oil Industry

The OPM slapped two new restrictions on the oil industry yesterday, one requiring the consent of adjacent property owners before a new well can be dug and the second banning the construction of new gasoline filling stations.

Police and Firemen's Choice . . .

"MISS PERSONALITY" CANDIDATES—Mary Fincher and Pat Comingore have been chosen to represent the Police and Fire Department Post, American Legion, in the "Miss Personality" contest being conducted in conjunction with the Shrine Circus. Here the girls receive from Capt. M. H. Sutton (left), of Engine Company 2, and Sergt B. F. McAllister, of Police Precinct 5, books of tickets they will sell. The circus opens February 9 at Uline Arena for a five-day stand for the benefit of Almas Temple charities

Bar Favors Bill Changing Judge Removal

The District Bar Association last night adopted a resolution favoring passage of a bill that would change the method of removing Federal judges from the bench.

The action came at the association's regular meeting at the Mayflower Hotel following remarks by Representative Hatton W. Sumners (Democrat), of Texas, author of the bill. Sumners said:

"Just because you put one of those black nightshirts on a fellow it doesn't make him an angel.

"We want the courts to be independent. This bill seeks to move in the direction of control of the judiciary over the judges. The bar wants this legislation, the judiciary wants it and the Department of Justice wants it very badly."

The bill would have Federal judges tried by three appellate judges on charges instituted by the Department of Justice with members of the House having the right to assist in the prosecution. This would change the present method whereby a judge may be removed by the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment.

Justice Wiley Rutledge, associate justice of the Court of Appeals, spoke on the proper method of preparing briefs for that court.

E. Barrett Prettyman presided.

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Beverly Hills, Calif., Jan. 13.—Mrs. Blanche Fleisher, wife of Benjamin Fleisher, for many years owner of the Japan Advertiser, and mother of Wilfrid Fleisher, former Tokyo correspondent for the New York Herald Tribune, died here late yesterday of pneumonia. She was 67 years old.

Mr. and Mrs. Fleisher had been living here since their return from Japan in November, 1941. Since 1914 they had published the Japan Advertiser, but in the fall of that year Japanese pressure forced them to sell the paper. Their son Wilfrid, who had been managing editor of the paper, came on to Washington where, since February of this year, he has been covering the State Department for the Herald Tribune.

Besides her husband and her son Wilfrid, Mrs. Fleisher is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Marion Wasserman, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Walter Washington, wife of an American diplomat now stationed in Stockholm.

Mrs. W. E. Cole, Jr., Dies in Italy

The death on January 7 of Mrs. William E. Cole, jr., 28, wife of the third secretary to the American Embassy in Rome, Italy, following an appendectomy in that city was announced yesterday by her husband's parents, Maj. Children Aid District Drive For Red Cross

Gifts from children yesterday helped roll the District Red Cross War Fund along to $110,179.36 on its goal of $750,000.

Some of that amount came from Phyllis Sherman, 11 years old, 7110 Ninth Street Northwest, and Judy Solomon, 10 years old, 6817 Georgia Avenue Northwest, who made woolen lapel dogs and sold them for a quarter apiece to get money for the Red Cross.

From the White House came $8, the contribution of two little girls sent to President Roosevelt as head of the Red Cross.

Workers at St. Ann's Infant Asylum, 2300 K Street Northwest, contributed 100 per cent for a total of $28.85.

The Red Cross yesterday announced appointment of Richard F. Allen, its delegate to Europe, as vice chairman in charge of insular and foreign operations, and of James T. Nicholson, national director of the American Junior Red Cross, as vice chairman in charge of the Junior Red Cross. The latter position is newly created.

Laurence M. Mitchell was appointed director of insular and foreign operations. He is a veteran in Red Cross service.

Contract Bridge

"Please advise the correct opening bid on this hand, writes contributor Mrs. J. W. R. concerning a freak two-suiter. The cards:

♠ J8762
♡ AKQ9543

♣ None

Our choice would be a bid of one heart. The hand has enormous possibilities, and with strength in both majors there is no need of preempting. The best way to reach a slam is to start off gently with a bid of one heart. In this way there are plenty of bidding rounds left to find out what cards partner holds.

Another two-suiter, though not quite such a freak, is the North hand of today's box. Today's deal illustrates the technique—that of passing with strong values for what developed in this case to be large gains.

The board was played by Lee Hazen and Myron Fuchs, both masters, at a national championship. Holding what surely must have been the best hand at the table, Lee passed until the adversaries bid themselves out of three diamonds. Then he doubled: it was a "take out or leave it" double, since the adversaries were vulnerable, and with Fuchs's array of diamonds there was little question as to the decision. From a bird's-eye view of the cards East's redouble seems a bit optimistic, but there is no doubt that he pictured the holdings differently.

The result was down four for a loss of 2,000 points for East-West. Fuchs and Hazen won two clubs, two spades, one heart and three diamonds, or eight tricks.

Stores to Help Collect Books For Army Men

Places where books may be left in the "Books for Buddies" campaign will be increased from 14 to 254 today.

The 240 new collection places will be the stores of the District Grocery Stores, Inc. Mrs. Philip Sidney Smith, District committee chairman of the drive to collect books for servicemen, said the store management had offered to place containers in each of the units.

The drive to collect 100,000 books was one-hundredth along its way yesterday, with about 1000 volumes donated to date.

An idea of Mrs. Ernest P. Bicknell, 1661 Crescent Place Northwest, brought in 200 books. She sent around notes to 50 apartment neighbors inviting them to donate. The response was immediate and generous.

All sorts of books are wanted in this Victory book campaign—both fiction and nonfiction. Books may be taken to the stores or to the public libraries. In addition to the 240 in Washington proper, District Grocery Stores, Inc., stores in the Metropolitan area outside the District also will receive books.

Music from Gounod's lyric opera, "Faust," will be featured in the second program of "Great Moments in Music," with Jean Tennyson, Norman Cordon, Suzanne Sten and William Hain singing its most popular airs when you hear it over WJSV at 10:15 tonight.

Cordon, one of America's foremost singers, was chosen as a guest artist from the Metropolitan Opera for the role of Mephisto because his bass-baritone voice so admirably suits the characterization. Hain, a talented tenor, has sung extensively in light opera and in concert with leading symphony orchestras.

Miss Sten, widely known mezzo soprano, who will be heard frequently hereafter in the new series of opera music conducted by George Sebastian, former state opera conductor for the U. S. S. R., will be making her first appearance on the series.

Robert Lyons, the narrator, will weave the songs together with descriptive passages. Gounod's opera concerns a discouraged student, one Faust, who sells his soul to the Devil in return for being given his lost youth, only to pay for his bargain with tragedy.

The excerpts to be sung from the opera—eight in all—include the famous waltz, the Song of the Golden Calf, the Jewel Song, the Quartet from the final scene, and the final trio.

Anonymous Rent Appeals Are Ignored, Cogswell Says

Rent Administrator Robert F. Cogswell yesterday appealed to District tenants and landlords to sign their correct names to all complaints with his office.

"We cannot," he said, "accept nor act upon petitions signed anonymously. Although complaint forms need not be notarized, we insist that correct names be used."

Cogswell also reported that many persons each day call his office in the old Force School, register protests, but refuse to give their names.

"Consequently," he added, "we are unable to act upon these complaints, as valid as they may be."

He urged, in addition, that persons refrain from presenting hypothetical cases with requests for a ruling. He said all instances must be "specific and real" to warrant action.

Complaints on authorized forms, accurately presenting facts and signed, continue to pour into his office, Cogswell said. Some 50 have been studied and will be turned over to one of three examiners scheduled to be appointed this week, he added.

As soon as the examiners are named and have an opportunity to go over complaints on file, each case will be given a hearing, Cogswell promised.

Complaint forms, he said, are available at his office, 1740 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest, and he insisted that all protests, from either landlords or tenants, be made on these special petitions.

Detroit Unions Back Campaign To Unify Labor

Detroit, Jan. 13 (AP).—Officials of C. I. O., A. F. L. and independent unions in Detroit disclosed today that in a joint meeting last night they had pledged support "to a campaign to win the forces of organized labor to genuine, complete and honest labor unity everywhere."

Officials or leading members of 31 local unions with a total membership of 331,000 attended the meeting, its sponsors announced. George Edwards, former United Automobolie Workers (C. I. O.) organizer, who recently took office as an elected member of Detroit city council, acted as temporary chairman.

A resolution adopted by the group stated labor disunity "tends to disrupt the smooth working of the defense program, thus undermining the Nation's security." It added that "continued division in labor's ranks plays into the hands of selfish and short-sighted employers who seek to use this division to undermine the great social gains of labor and liberalism."

Unionists at the meeting named a steering committee to report to a second session of the group January 26.

Gypsy Takes Cash, Coats In 'Faith Cure'

More than $150 in cash and five fur coats have been taken from as many women here in the past month by a gypsy woman in a hocus-pocus stunt.

Each of the victims, middle-aged women, told detectives the same story:

They were in ill health when the gypsy appeared, promising to make them feel better. "You are beset by an evil spirit," she told them.

Together they prayed and the gypsy requested a napkin and $20 or $30 "to bless so it will bring you good fortune."

The money was placed under the napkin and the victim told to shut her eyes and pray. While she was praying the gypsy wrapped the money—or so the victim thought—in the napkin and tied it around the owner's neck.

"Leave it there for three days and give me your fur coat that I can bless it at home and rid it of the evil spirits."

In each case after the "healer" had left the victim's curiosity was too strong—she looked at her money. It was only paper, tied in a roll.

The gypsy in a lookout broadcast yesterday was described as 25 to 30, 5 feet 6 inches tall, weighing 130 pounds. She was dressed, when last seen, in a gray checked coat and presented a neat appearance.

Grand Jury Indicts Only 15 In Unusually Quiet Session

The new District grand jury handed up a total of 15 indictments to Justice T. Alan Goldsborough in District Court yesterday, making its first return since it was sworn in for a 90-day term last week.

The indictments, fewest that have been returned for some time, ranged from the unauthorized use of automobiles to assault with intent to kill. Charges brought against three men were dismissed by the grand jurors.

The charges against those indicted were:

War Work Coordinated

Creation of a department to coordinate the seven-fold war service program of B'nai B'rith was announced yesterday by Henry Monsky, president. The organization has its national headquarters here.

The seven fields which the B'nai B'rith war service program covers are civilian defense, Red Cross, sponsorship of and participation in community meetings and war service rallies, assistance to Government agencies, collaboration in Army and Navy welfare work, stimulation of sales of defense bonds and stamps, and contributions to war relief agencies.

More than 5000 members of B'nai B'rith and of Aleph Zadik Aleph, the latter its youth organization, are serving in the armed forces, it was said. B'nai B'rith's national headquarters has contributed $5000 to the Red Cross war fund drive, and individual units throughout the country are attempting to raise $45,000, according to President Monsky.
